NRA Rankled At Auto Code As 'Imposed' By Roosevelt

Board Voted Against Proposed Changes; Was Overruled.

48-Hour Proviso Stirs Opposition

Tobacco and Cigarette Pact Reported Lost at White House.

By Felix Bruner.

Important NRA officials joined representatives of organized labor yesterday in expressing disappointment over President Roosevelt's order "imposing" a revised automobile code. The code was "imposed not only upon organized labor, which was not consulted, but upon the National Industrial Recovery Board itself which by a majority vote refused to approve the changes.

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor last night bitterly denounced renewal of the code and charged Donald R. Richberg, New Deal coordinator, is hostile to labor. Earlier in the day, William Green, federation president, had told a Senate sub-committee, referring to the automobile code, "we will not accept it, recognize it, or yield to it." NRA board members and officials refused to be quoted, but most of them left no doubt as to their disappointment with the Administration's action.

The story of how the code amendments were jammed through by Richberg over opposition of labor and a majority of the Recovery Board, starts with a visit to the White House Thursday afternoon by Walter P. Chrysler, head of Chrysler Motors; Alfred P. Sloan, chairman of the board of General Motors; S. Clay Williams, chairman of the Recovery Board, and Richberg.

Voted Against Changes.

Williams and Richberg carried the code amendments back to the NRA, where the board was hastily assembled. The members voted, 3 to 2, against the changes. Voting for the new code were Williams and A. D. Whiteside. Voting against it were Walton H. Hamilton, Sidney Hillman and L. C. Marshall. The result of the vote is reported to have been communicated to the President by Richberg. Shortly thereafter, the code changes were announced as they had originally been drawn. The announcement was made by Williams and Richberg.

The NRA board split principally over the provision for a 48-hour working week, with time-and-a-half pay for more than 48 hours. Opponents of the code as it was amended held out for a 40-hour week, which is provided in most other codes. It was pointed out that the new code places no limit on the hours during which an employe may work, although it retains the provision for an average of 40 hours over an annual period. This average can be attained by laying workers off.

The split between the American Federation of Labor and the Administration appeared to be complete yesterday. Fuel was added to the fire of labor resentment by President Roosevelt's announcement that the tobacco and cigarette

French Strikes Cause Rioting

Outbursts at Toulon and Brest Follow Clash in Paris Chamber.

Paris, Feb. 1 (AP).—Economic unrest flaring at several places in France today followed an uproarious session in the Chamber of Deputies, where charges that armed political troops were drilling to fight each other were freely made.

Strikers at the arsenals and shipyards in Brest and Toulon, who walked out to protest 4 per cent pay cuts, clashed in sharp fighting with mobile guards, while medical students in Paris struck against "too much competition from foreigners."

The disorders took on political significance in the light of the government's efforts to keep the country quiet over February 6, the first anniversary of the bloody Stavisky riots of 1934.

Conservative and radical extremists in the chamber flung fiery accusations back and forth, each faction asserting the other was arming and drilling in preparation for civil warfare.

The government, carefully refraining from taking sides in the verbal battle, cut short the debate.

One striker and one mobile guard were wounded at Brest when 1,500 riotous strikers, barricading themselves behind an overturned truck, fought the guards sent to protect headquarters of the Solidarite Francais, Fascist organization.

At Toulon several workers in the naval arsenal were injured in a short, hot fight with mounted mobile guards, armed with rifles, who blocked the street along which the workers attempted to parade after their one-hour protest strike.

Brigands Slay Guard in Seizing Vessel; Hold Captors 66 Hours; Flee to Lair With Loot as British Fighting Craft Arrives.

Hongkong (Saturday), Feb. 2 (AP).—A British airplane roared over the coastal steamer Tungchow at noon yesterday while her passengers, prisoners of pirates, cheered wildly and the outlaws, who seized the ship soon after she sailed from Shanghai Tuesday, fled for shore.

That was the dramatic story radioed to Hongkong today as the Tungchow—the 75 American, British and Scandinavian school children aboard her safe—made for this port after 66 hours in the hands of the pirates.

The pirates, numbering 12, boarded the ship at Shanghai and seized control at 6 p. m. Tuesday, the radio advices said.

A Russian guard, one of six employed to protect the vessel from piracy, fought off four men until finally he was shot down. Passengers said the brigands brutally killed him.

Engineer Shot.

When the alarm was sounded, Second Engineer MacDonald rushed from his cabin only to fall, shot in the chest.

The pirates then seized control of the ship, took all arms and turned her nose southward.

For three days they systematically looted her. The passengers, however, were treated with every consideration, although they were herded into the saloons and held prisoners there.

In an effort to avoid detection, the pirates painted the ship's black funnel red and white, and also painted on her sides the Japanese name, Toa Maru.

Take Loot Ashore.

Near Chilang Point at noon yesterday the pirates stopped the ship and summoned a junk alongside. One load of loot was conveyed ashore, but before the second trip could be made an airplane from the British aircraft carrier Hermes, which was exercising outside of territorial waters, appeared over the ship, to the enthusiastic cheers of the children.

The outlaws hurried ashore in the ship's boat, taking with them as hostages the chief officer, the Chinese wireless operator and several Chinese passenger.

Once they reached shore, they stove in the boat and fled, leaving the hostages on the beach. Another

President Aims To End Subsidy On Ocean Mail

Message Planned Soon Will Urge Contracts Be on 'Commercial Basis.'

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Carrying out a policy first enunciated by President Roosevelt more than a year ago, the Administration intends to divorce subsidies from ocean mail contracts just as is now proposed in the case of the air mail.

Two reports on the merchant marine—one by the Postoffice Department, the other by the Department of Commerce—will be sent to Capitol Hill with a White House message within the next two weeks, the President said yesterday.

In them are expecteed to be recommendations for placing the ocean mail on the same "strict commercial basis" as was urged for the air mail in Thursday's report of the Federal Aviation Commission.

The Aviation Commission recommended that a direct subsidy of "about $7,000,000" annually be set aside for air transport. At the same time, it proposed that rate-making be taken from the Postoffice Department and invested in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Out of this report, and the general report on transportation by Coordinator Joseph B. Eastman that preceded it, has come a composite picture of what the Administration has in mind for the future.

Mr. Eastman suggested that the I. C. C. be enlarged from 11 to 16 members and that they be given supervision over all forms of trans-

Roosevelt Acts To Slash Costs Of Social Plan

(Copyright, 1935, by The Associated Press.)

Significant changes in the President's social security plan designed to take the onus of charity off unemployment insurance, and also to save the Government several hundred millions a year, were reported yesterday to have been mapped by Administration officials.

These changes, it was asserted in an informed Capitol quarter, would be presented to Congress next week. An accompanying effort would be made to hurry enactment so the 44 State Legislatures meeting this winter could put through correlative laws. Signs of delay in final action already have appeared in both Senate and House.

President Roosevelt, at a late press conference, meanwhile stood fast against enlargement of Federal contributions to old-age pensions above $15 a month. Even with this figure, Government payments would reach $585,000,000 a year in 1980, and to go above it, he felt, would impose an unbearable cost.

The States could add more than their $15 share, he emphasized, but pointed out the prospective $360 a year from Federal-State contributions would be more than paid in many States, including New York.

Roughly, and although some modifications may be in store before the suggested recommendations for changes are submitted, it was said they would include:

1. Transfer of administration of the unemployment insurance fund from a new social insurance board to the Treasury.

2. Elimination of Federal donation of "unearned" annuities.

3. Possible exemption of farm-

M'Carl Voids Salary Rises By President

Attacks Cummings' Rule on Emergency Pay Adjustments.

Comptroller General McCarl yesterday upheld the economy act clause banning promotions and took sharp issue with Attorney General Cummings, who approved salary adjustments for emergency workers authorized by the President under an executive order.

While the full effect of the comptroller general's ruling had not been studied it was considered likely in informed circles that it would affect hundreds of salary promotions in the emergency organizations.

The ruling also was seen as possibly affecting other emergency expenditures which might be in conflict with provisions of the basic law whether incorporated in the economy act or not.

17 Allowances Barred.

McCarl's ruling was specifically applicable to the War Department and disallowed 17 salary allowances made by the finance officer in connection with the work of the Civilian Canservation Corps.

The ruling particularly was aimed at the President's order of several months ago in which he ordered salary adjustments to bring employes in emergency organizations to the general level of workers under classified status.

Officials in the Comptroller General's office expressed the opinion the ruling would remain in effect to curb further promotions and expenditures contrary to the basic law until proper congressional action is taken.

Mr. McCarl's ruling upholds the letter of the economy act which specifies that there shall be no administrative promotions. The ruling points out that the 14 persons concerned were being paid from emergency funds and as such were not subject to the classification act. Previously Mr. McCarl had held that advances among emergency workers should not exceed one step-up since in that case they would amount to administrative promotions.

Ruling Abrogated.

Last April, Attorney General Cummings took issue with the Comptroller General and ruled that adjustments authorized under the President's executive order were not prohibited. This ruling was abrogated in full by Mr. McCarl's latest ruling.

In the case on which the ruling was returned the War Department acted on the basis of the Attorney General's decision. Mr. McCarl disallowed the claims when the hearing was first held and the decision of yesterday constituted his findings on a review of the entire case.

The promotion issue in the emergency organizations has been the subject of a long fight and the consensus in the Comptroller's office is that unless Congress steps in disburing officers will be held responsible for all overpayments.

Text of Ruling.

Mr. McCarl ruled:

"Executive orders are issued in the light of existing law and in furtherance of the purpose of the law or laws to which they have relation and are so to be understood and observed — and subordinates may not by their conduct place the Executive in a light of proposing to disregard rather than to give effect to statutory law. * * * It is true that some of the officers in the executive branch and even heads of offices having unclassified employes and including the Attorney General, as suggested by you, appear of the opinion that when Congress, in

Bribe Racket Since Repeal Laid to Police

Gambling Attributed by Blanton to Laxity of Officials.

By J. Bernard McDonnell.

District police have developed a new racket since repeal. They send mature appearing youths to purchase liquor and then confront the liquor seller with the fact he has sold to a minor and make a deal.

Gambling joints continue to operate in the District because they have police protection.

Automobile "sheiks" annoy decent women going about their business on the streets and often frighten them by their persistent attentions. A lashing at the whipping post should be given them, and 50 young, good-looking, modishly-dressed women might be supplied with police power to arrest them.

A new public safety board should be created. The board would have its own investigators and jurisdiction over the punishment and possibly promotion of members of the police force.

The present civil service system of selection and promotion should be abolished for the Police Department.

The foregoing were some of the suggestions and accusations advanced at the executive hearing yesterday of the District crime investigating sub-committee headed by Representative Jennings Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia. They were selected for first mention ahead of others advanced because each seemed to have full approval of some, partial approval of others, or to have other aspects which may be reflected in the final legislative program of the crime committee.

Police Shake Down Charged.

Representative Everett M. Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, charged the police with the new liquor shake-down racket. His charge was couched in questions addressed to Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, who was on the witness stand for the third day.

"I have had a report or two," Mr. Dirksen said, "that some police are shaking down some of the liquor stores. They send a mature appearing youth into a store to purchase liquor.

"Under the silly liquor law we passed last year for the District—it is a ghastly law—the only thing necessary to convict a liquor seller of a violation of the law prohibiting sale to minors is to prove a sale was made to a person and prove the date of birth. It is very possible for the police to send someone into a store to make a purchase and then go in and say 'You have made a sale to a minor,' and make some sort of a deal."

Blanton Accuses Force.

Representative Thomas L. Blanton (Democrat), of Texas, charged gambling joints were operating in the District with police knowledge and portection.

"You think, then," Representative William Schulte (Democrat), of Illinois, asked, "that some police here are protecting these establishments?"

"Oh," cried Mr. Blanton, "there is no question about it. Whenever you find an open gambling house you can know that either the police captain and the policeman on the beat are crooked or they are numbskulls who ought to be kicked off the force. I've been in many places while I was a member of the District Committee, and I have seen policemen in uniform in those places where the law was being violated."

Mr. Blanton was referring to the hectic days when he made himself chief prosecutor of those District officials he deemed derelict. He has reformed, he told the committee. He has too many other things to occupy his mind to dally with District affairs, he said. His activities in District affairs nearly cost him his seat in the House when an opponent charged he neglected Texas affairs. He refused yesterday to take the witness chair until photographers had been ordered from the room, although every one had assured him no pictures would be taken of him mixing in District affairs.

Mais, Legenza To Die Today; Both Are Calm

Latter Will Go to Chair on Stretcher Despite Wish 'to Walk Like a Man.'

By William T. Christian

(Special Correspondent of The Post)

Richmond, Va., Feb. 1.—Apparently unbroken as they entered their last few hours of life, Walter Legenza and Robert Mais sat in their corner of the death house tonight and calmly watched the guard's pendulum-like pacing before their cells.

Even though it was the last day they will spend on earth the condemned men slept until 11 o'clock before arising for breakfast. Later in the day they consumed candy and other food from the prison commissary and talked to each other through the sawproof bars of the all-steel cells. Guards reported them as surprisingly calm.

In the deluge of assorted mail addressed to the condemned men was one "crank" letter which Maj. Rice Youell, superintendent, was unable to solve. It mentioned "baked chicken," reminiscent of the gangsters' break from the city jail here and indicated that its writer was making an effort to release the doomed men. The communication was not taken seriously.

In the death house there is no clock or calendar, but none is needed as far as the condemned killers are concerned. They have kept an accurate check of the 11 short days they have spent there since the rainy morning they were hustled from a New York train, and guards who pace up and down on the death watch tell them the hour when requested.

Just 13 steps, a number long identified with executions, will be taken by Mais tomorrow as he stumbles from his cell through the paneled door to the waiting electric chair—

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 1.—Of all the bewildering narratives that have been told under oath in court here, the strangest one came out today when counsel for Bruno Richard Hauptmann produced testimony designed to prove that Isador Fisch and Violet Sharpe kidnaped the Lindbergh baby and carried him across the Hudson River into New York.

There is no rest for the dead in this case.

Violet Sharpe, housemaid in the home of Mrs. Dwight Morrow, grandmother of the murdered baby, committed suicide just when State police were about to question her concerning the kidnaping.

Peter H. Sommer is the man who told all this. He used to be a fingerprint expert in New York City, and must have made 500 court appearances in his day. But never has a witness in this trial been so shaken and rattled by cross-examination. Not even Millard Whited, who came down out of Sourland Mountains unable to read and unable to grasp the meaning of the legal terms flung at him by lawyers.

Witness' Story.

Sommer was brought into court as a defense witness, but for some bewildering reason Edward J. Reilly, chief of the Hauptmann legal staff, never did draw from him a connected narrative of what he saw and heard at midnight on the night the Lindbergh baby was stolen. It was only under cross examination by Attorney General David T. Wilentz that his story began to take shape and substance.

This is what Sommer said happened:

On March 1, 1932, he was at Fairview, N. J., giving instructions in fingerprinting. Near midnight he got on the Weehawken Ferry, bound for New York.

"There were two men on the boat," he said. "One was 5 feet 4 inches tall; one was 5 feet 9 inches tall. They were smoking cigarettes." Reilly walked over to the witness chair, carrying a picture of Isador Fisch.

"I show you this picture," Reilly said, "and ask you if you ever saw this man."

Identifies Picture of Fisch.

"Yes, on the ferryboat that night," the witness replied.

"Go on."

"The boat landed and the two men assisted a woman and a baby on a street car."

Reilly went back to the defense table and picked up another picture.

"I show you this picture and ask you if it was the woman you saw?"

"I think it was."

It was a picture of Violet Sharpe.

"The woman seemed very nervous," Sommer said. "She held the baby and was nervous."

"Did you see the baby?"

"Yes."

"Was it blond or brunette?"

"It was blond."

"How old was it?"

"About two years."

The Lindbergh baby was 21 months old when it was kidnaped and had curly, golden hair.

Piece by piece the defense was building up its contention that two men—neither of whom was Hauptmann—kidnaped the baby. Yesterday Lou Harding, a laborer, swore he saw two men on a New Jersey road in an automobile that contained the ladder found on the Lindbergh estate after the kidnaping. These two men, he said, asked him to direct them to the Lindbergh home on the day of the kidnaping.

Then Wilentz got up for cross-examination and led Sommers into

4.8 Billion Dole Held Possible; "Spoils" Spur Protest Caucus

Minority Today Will Draft Changes in Works Bill.

By Robert C. Albright.

The President's vast works and relief bill would permit the entire $4,880,000,000 appropriation to be spent for direct relief if abandonment of the works program in favor of immediate aid became opportune, it was disclosed last night.

Aroused at this and other unusual testimony, minority members of the Senate Appropriations Committee summoned a conference this morning, after committee hearings closed yesterday. Amendments vitally affecting the character of the bill will be drafted.

The Republican meeting was called as Senate Minority Leader Charles L. McNary abandoned plans for a general Senate party conference on the measure. He said he intends to thrust partisan considerations in the background so far as this measure is concerned, allowing Republicans on the Appropriations Committee to proceed in the normal way.

'Young Sorehead' Tag by the President Is Resented.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

A group of Democratic Congressmen, angry over New Deal spoils distribution, yesterday agreed to go ahead with plans for a protest caucus Thursday despite White House peace overtures.

Other developments in the skirmish over Federal jobs included:

Disclosure that leaders of the movement for a sweeping investigation of the patronage situation were angry because President Roosevelt flung at them the epithet "young soreheads."

There was resentment over efforts by Postmaster General Farley to strip House members of their privilege of passing on postmastership appointments in their districts.

Removal of Republicans as emergency agency personnel officers became the spearhead of the congressional drive.

Representatives McFarlane and Blanton, both of Texas, and Mitchell, of Tennessee, drafted outing resolutions for introduction at the caucus.

President Roosevelt took a hand

Assassin Plot Again Blocked, Long Tells 'Revolution' Probe

Baton Rouge, La., Feb. 1 (U.P.).—A new plot to assassinate Senator Huey P. Long was "revealed" by the dictator himself tonight as he resumed his "investigation" in the State Supreme Court chamber here.

The inquiry, started to the accompaniment of skull-cracking, martial law, threatened rebellion and radio broadcasting, was to have unfolded details of last week's insurrection and the alleged conspiracy to murder him then.

But it also brought the disclosure of a telegram which said Long was to have been killed today, upon his return from Washington.

The telegram, purportedly sent to the Chicago Tribune from Hammond, La., and signed "George B. Campbell, editor of the Vindicator," said:

"Plans are well laid for the assassination of Huey Long on his return from Washington Friday. Under no circumstances quote me as my life would be jeopardized. Determined citizenry of Livingston, East and West Feliciana, Tangipahoa and St. Helena parishes vow to get revenge. This means bloodshed with the possibility of State-wide rebellion."

Long read the telegram aloud. He did not say how he got it. Judge W. D. Womack, Long's friend, who is "presiding" over the investigation, summoned Campbell to appear tomorrow and explain his telegram.

The new development interrupted Long's quest for details of an alleged plot to ambush him and his bodyguards on the Baton Rouge highway ten days ago.

Up to this time the star witness

Nattily Attired Singing Slayer Dances Blithely to Meet Noose

New Orleans, Feb. 1 (AP).—Louis Kenneth Neu, 28-year-old former night club entertainer, of Savannah, Ga., was hanged today for the murder of Sheffield Clark, Nashville (Tenn) business man.

Nattily attired, his black hair almost glowing, the "singing slayer" kept up his mirthful spirit until the end.

Meticulous in his preparations for death as he sang then prayed, Neu maintained this strict attention to details until he dropped through the trap.

As he stepped upon the steel trap door, he tested it with his feet with half a dozen light dancing steps. Promptly at 12:03 p. m. Hangman Henry Meyer, who had been reported dangerously near death himself within recent weeks, pulled the heavy iron lever that opened the jams of the trap, and Neu dropped to his death. Nineteen minutes later he was pronounced dead.

Forty-five minutes before the death march from his prison cell to the execution chamber began Neu had sung, in a clear, rich voice: "Love in Bloom." Before his final song he had greeted the prison physician and joked with him.

"Glad you came this time, doctor," he said, "for the next time you will see me, I will not be able to see you." Making an effort to keep his mind off his fate, Neu talked lightly of airplanes, speed, fancy flying and parachute jumping.

"By the way," he said, "I am much in the same position as the parachute jumper, you know. It is not the falling that one fears; it is that sudden stop," he chuckled.

All Bank Units Under Reserve Seen Combined

Program for Present Kept Secret; Omnibus Bill Roosevelt's Plan.

Consolidation eventually of all Federal banking functions into one agency, probably the Federal Reserve Board, was predicted yesterday in a high quarter, one not particularly New Deal in its outlook.

The prediction was not intended to indicate any immediate action but, based on the present trend in banking regulation, was the opinion of an authority as to what may be expected in the next five years. Such a consolidation would bring the Reserve System, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Comptroller of Currency's office into one unit.

This possibility was outlined as the Treasury and Reserve System officials were placing the finishing touches on the Administration's banking program, which it is expected President Roosevelt will lay before Congress in a special message within a short time.

Although the bank legislation program has been definitely decided on, it was authoritatively learned, its details remain shrouded in mystery and conflicting reports. But is is known that it is planned to offer all bank legislation proposals in an omnibus bill divided into three sections.

To Strengthen FDIC.

One part o fthe bill will be devoted to provisions for strengthening the Depsit Insurance Corporation, giving that agency further and clearer control ove- insurance banks. There is no provision for merging this agency with any other at this time, it was explained.

Another section of the bill will be devoted to proposed amendments to the national bank act, desired by J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, who has jjurisdiction over those institutions. The third section of the measure will be devoted to amendments to the Federal Reserve Act. It isthis latter section that is regarded as important and which has been kept a mystery on the whole.

There has been widespread speculation over the extent which these legislative proposals would transform the Reserve system from a regional banking structure into a highly centralized one. For instance, it has been reported the bill provides for merging the duties of Federal Reserve agent with those of governor of Reserve banks and making the latter official an appointee of the board.

Still another proposal Congress will be asked to approve, according to reports, would give the Reserve Board plenary power over open-market operations, the purchase and sale of Government obligations by Reserve banks.

Would Control Interest.

Whether these proposals are contained in the bill now being drafted and if so, in what form, remains unknown. The bill, however, does contain a large number of amendments to the existing law, particularly to provisions enacted in 1933. Many of these amendments are of a technical nature and are designed to clarify or tighten up existing law.

The FDIC in its section of the bill will seek authority over the deposit interest rates which insured nonmember banks may pay. The agency in December attempted to order all nonmember banks to reduce their maximum interest rates to 2½ per cent. Due to the vigorous objections raised by Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, the FDIC has indefinitely postponed the effective date of its order.

Senator Glass contended the FDIC had no authority to order a cut in interest rates. The Reserve Board in December likewise ordered deposit interest rates reduced to 1½ per cent, effective yesterday.

G. O. P. Coalition to Reelect Roosevelt? Farley Dismisses Fletcher; A Long Foe.

By Raymond Clapper

REPUBLICAN leaders here and there, chiefly in the Middle West, are playing with the idea of forming a coalition for the reelection of President Roosevelt. A Midwestern Governor and other leaders who stayed with the Hoover ticket in 1932 are said to be thinking in this direction.

The talk is vague and undercover. Whether anything will come of it is uncertain. Primarily it is a reflex of the rapid growth of leftist activity and the fire fanned up by the Huey Longs, the Father Coughlins, the Townsendites and such. This group's power, demonstrated in the eleventh-hour stampede against the World Court, has caused considerable alarm. The fear is that these forces, if massed behind a truly radical program, will stir a revolt which would wreak havoc in the presidential election. Even if it did not tip over Mr. Roosevelt, it might give him a wild Congress which would be uncontrollable. Though this seems a somewhat panicky view, the thought is that the conservative vote, if split between Mr. Roosevelt and the Republicans, might open the gate for the left-wingers.

That a formal coalition could develop between the two parties by next year appears doubtful. If anything in that direction happens, it more likely will be a tacit movement such as occurred in 1924 when, in face of the La Follette third-party ticket, thousands of Democrats voted their own local tickets but switched to Coolidge on the presidential ticket.

At this time the coalition talk is significant, chiefly because it indicates the uneasy state of mind which exists over the failure of recovery measures to restore employment. It would disappear with real reemployment during the next 18 months, and Mr. Roosevelt would be sitting so pretty that an election would be a waste of money. But if business activity still is largely dependent upon the stimulation of Federal funds, the problem will be acute, and the way children were once said to have cried for Castoria will be nothing to the adult cry for panaceas.

• • • •

Any effort among Midwestern Republicans to bring about a party abdication is likely to encounter serious resistance because if the Roosevelt program does not produce satisfactory results, the incentive will be all the greater for the Republican Party to fight for an end of the New Deal program and substitution of another line of attack. Although handicapped by a lack of suitable Presidential material, and demoralized by the defeats of 1932 and last November, the party has its last year's nest-egg of 13,000,000 votes, and Republican National Chairman Fletcher is working strenuously to hold it together and infuse fight into it.

• • • •

In his speech in New York this week Fletcher proposed a constructive reform. He urged that the President be given power to veto separate items of an appropriation bill without having to disapprove of a whole bill. Chairman Fletcher said this change could be made by action of Congress, although the Constitution appears to give the President only the option of accepting a bill or returning it with a veto.

Whether or not a constitutional amendment would be necessary, this limitation on the presidential veto power is responsible for the countless "riders" which Congress attaches to appropriation bills and other measures which have to be enacted. It accounts for much of the pork which gets into legislation. Fletcher suggests that if the Administration would bring about such a reform, the President would not find it necessary to ask for such broad powers as he now seeks on the ground that it circumvents congressional log-rolling.

Chairman Farley, of the Democratic National Committee, dismissed Fletcher's speech lightly, saying that the country would merely yawn and tell him to go on dreaming. A constructive suggestion from the opposition ought to receive more consideration than that.

Ever since Secretary Ickes went to the aid of Lynchburg, Va., Senator Carter Glass has had a soft spot in his heart for the PWA administrator. Lynchburg wanted to float a bond issue and Ickes took it at 4 per cent. It turned out to be a good investment, for Ickes sold the bonds at a profit later. His confidence in the credit of Lynchburg won Glass as a stanch friend, for the unreconstructed rebel likes anyone who thinks well of his home city.

Organized labor is preparing to tear the automobile dispute wide open in Congress. It is sponsoring a resolution by Senator Schwellenbach, of Washington, for an investigation of labor conditions in the industry. The resolution, already introduced, is expected to come before the Senate Labor Committee next week and the A. F. of L. is pressing for a favorable report. It is on the defensive as a result of the recent employe elections in Detroit, where it registered a vote of only about 5 per cent. A. F. of L. leaders say they advised their members not to vote in the election, but even assuming those who registered no affiliation were secret A. F. of L. men their forces were far below what had been thought. Blunt dissatisfaction of organized labor with the terms under which the automobile code was extended has brought the long smoldering issue to a head.

Kentucky Adjutant Threatens 'to Clean Out County' if Violence Results.

Manchester, Ky., Feb. 1 (AP).—Warning that any violence against the National Guardsmen and State police would result in enough troops being sent in to "clean out Clay County from end to end," was given today by Adjt. Gen. Henry H. Denhardt as State forces continued to search for automobiles allegedly stolen by a gang and hidden in the foothills near here.

Gen. Denhardt said the troops would remain "as long as it is necessary for them to round up all the stolen automobiles there and gather evidence for presentation to the 1936 Legislature with a view to the impeachment of a number of county officials."

There was no official explanation of the stern threat the adjutant general in Frankfort gave over the telephone to Sheriff T. C. McDaniel. It followed close upon the filing of a $25,000 damage suit against Brig. Gen. Ellerbe W. Carter and the attempt yesterday of Sheriff McDaniel to serve a warrant against Clyde Jones, a State policeman.

Gen. Carter told county officials that any interference with State forces would result in arrests and Adjt. Gen. Denhardt telephoned the sheriff "If any member of the National Guard is killed, wounded or hurt in any way, enough State troops to clean up the county from end to end will be sent in there."

Examination of the records of automobile licenses issued in the county clerk's office was begun today by two National Guard officers. They were investigating reports that licenses had been issued for stolen cars so they could be moved out of the State for disposal.

In Frankfort, Gov. Ruby Laffoon declared that if necessary he would "keep a standing army" in the county to "see that the law is enforced."

Democrats Push Protest Caucus

In the brewing patronage quarrel last Tuesday when he conferred with representatives of the discontented element of his own party and promised to consider their grievances if they would submit facts to support their charges that Republicans were plucking more plums than Democrats.

Only yesterday, however, was it revealed that the President spoke disparagingly of the "young soreheads" behind the movement and made plain that so long as he remained in the White House all Government berths—irrespective of whether they are subject to Civil Service rules—will be distributed on a "strictly efficiency basis."

Disgruntled Congressmen privately replied whatever the desires of Mr. Roosevelt might be Federal appointments never had and never would be made on a basis of efficiency. They insisted since the advent of the New Deal State political machines, organizations of business men and Republican personnel officers in a majority of cases decided who would work for Uncle Sam.

Farley Assailed.

House members were particularly bitter at Farley's move to take away their control over appointment of postmasters. His plan was outlined in letters to members of Congress and party chairmen in practically all Northern States which have switched from the Republican to the Democratic column as follows:

"I have been making for some time an effort in some of the States around the country to arrive at a uniform system, if it were possible, of approving applications and appointments in the service in Washington.

"In New York State for a long time we have adopted the policy of clearing everything through the Democratic State Committee.

"We do that even in the case of the postoffice appointments because by having everything cleared through the same channel we are able to keep a careful record at headquarters of the appointments, and we are able to determine at a glance how the different counties are faring on the question of patronage.

"We have not had any trouble in working out this scheme, and I'm passing it along to you, to the State chairman and your Congressmen. I am sure you would be satisfied with this system if it could be worked out satisfactorily to all concerned.

"If I may not be too presumptuous, I am going to suggest that whenever you feel disposed to do so you might sit down with your Congressmen and State chairman and let me know what your reactions are."

Resolutions to be advanced at the caucus will call for an investigation into activities of Republican personnel officers in the NRA, PWA, HOLC, AAA and other emergency agencies; will ask that Farley and personnel officers be instructed to consult House Democrats before filling jobs in their districts, and will demand an investigation into alleged petty graft on Capitol Hill.

4.8-Billion Dole Declared Possible

Administrator, statements that the bill now permits the President to spend as much of the money as he chooses for direct relief. Senator L. J. Dickinson (Republican), Iowa, said Hopkins made the assertion at Wednesday's committee session.

Both Hopkins and Secretary of Interior Ickes, the two men who have had most to do with expenditure of past relief and works funds, denied unqualifiedly they were consulted at all about the pending measure. Ickes, who appeared yesterday, insisted he had not read the bill until Wednesday night.

It became increasingly evident that the Appropriations Committee will adhere to the President's request not to "earmark" the bill, although Republicans will join with some Democrats in an effort at least to allocate funds for highways, and possibly rivers and harbors, when the committee meets to mark the bill Monday.

The Major Fight.

It was learned last night that a Democrat may introduce the amendment round which the major fight may center in the Senate—a motion to segregate the $880,000,000 direct relief fund from the $4,000,000,000 works appropriation.

Regardless of who sponsors the amendment, Republicans will get behind it. Such action, they point out, would facilitate passage and immediately relieve the FERA of the emergency it faces February 10, when its present allotments expire.

Senator McNary insists Republicans are anxious to prevent a party fight on the measure and are seeking cooperation of Democrats so more consideration can be given the $4,000,000,000 phase of the bill. None of the witnesses before the committee could tell them specifically how it would be spent.

Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), Nevada, said the bill should be materially changed before it is passed. He will offer at least four amendments. They will specify Senate approval of anyone named to administer the fund and probably set up a bi-partisan administration board.

Other Amendments.

Other amendments by McCarran will call for payment of "adequate" wages on Government projects, competitive bidding for works by private contractors and utilization of existing Government agencies to distribute the fund. McCarran will be joined by at least one other Democrat, Senator Wagner, of New York, in his effort to provide for a "prevailing" wage scale on Federal works.

Before a Senate Judiciary subcommittee yesterday, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, bitterly protested proposals to pay relief workers $50 a month. He said the practice would "drag down" the wage level in private industry.

Secretary Ickes told the Appropriations Committee the PWA could use $1,000,000,000 immediately on non-Federal projects, putting 600,000 men to work within 60 days. He said he could effectively use another $1,000,000,000 on Federal projects.

Glass Sees "Mystery."

Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, committee chairman, said Ickes testified "he had neither precise nor general ideas on how the $4,000,000,000 would be distributed," and did not know what part he would play in the new set-up.

A few Senators pressed Ickes on questions of PWA administration. The public works administrator retorted "politics" never played a part in his bureau. That policy on his part, he declared, had brought him some trouble.

After hearings, committee members declared themselves still at a loss to know just how the money will be spent. Chairman Glass himself said the testimony "hasn't cleared up the mystery."

"I don't see how any member of the committee can go about 'earmarking' the bill on the basis of information we now have," said the Virginian. "I don't believe there's going to be any 'earmarking.'"

Demands Multiply For Federal Aid

Prompted in large part by the imminence of the $4,880,000,000 works program, the demands on President Roosevelt for Federal help in all parts of the country are piling up. Some of them yesterday were:

Senator Alben W. Barkley (Democrat), of Kentucky, headed a delegation that asked construction of a Federal park in the Mississippi valley to commemorate the Louisiana purchase.

Senators Lynn J. Frazier (Republican), North Dakota; Edward R. Burke (Democrat), Nebraska, and others submitted a request by the Missouri River Improvement Association for $35,000,000 additional to carry on channel work.

Senators Duncan U. Fletcher and Park Trammell (Democrats), of Florida, urged priority in the construction of new barracks for the Pensacola naval air station. Total improvements planned call for about $3,700,000.

Major Murder Trial Moves His Ex-Sweetheart; Gifts Exhibited.

Topeka, Kans., Feb. 1 (AP).—Grace Brandon was a tearful, nervous listener in the witness chair at the murder trial of Maj. Charles A. Shepard today as Government prosecutors, reading love letters penned by the major, sought to establish the motive by which to prove he poisoned his second wife, Zenna.

The blond stenographer from San Antonio, for love of whom the Government contends Shepard disposed of his wife June 15, 1929, wept as District Attorney S. S. Alexander read a letter referring to a quarrel they had after the major had been transferred from Fort Riley, Kans., to Denver.

A moment before she smiled for the first time when the defense blocked introduction of a letter she had written to Shepard. The defense contention that there was no proof the letter was received by the major caused her to volunteer almost inaudibly:

"Well, it wasn't returned to me."

Endearing terms such as "glorious, lovable, wonderful you," by the elderly major, were greeted with laughter from the spectators.

The witness' eyes were downcast. Shepard, seated with counsel, appeared nonchalant.

Many gifts of jewelry and clothing from the major to Miss Brandon were paraded before the jury after identification by the witness. Others, including a motor car, were described in detail. Operating expenses of the motor car were taken care of by the major in checks sent to Miss Brandon, the letters brought out.

Dam Shuts Off Colorado Flow For First Time

3,000,000-Pound Gate Is Dropped to Halt River on Arizona Side.

Boulder Dam, Nev., Feb. 1 (AP).—For the first time in its history, which geologists say is some 3,000,000 years, the turbulent Colorado River was halted today and brought under control for the benefit of man.

As dawn tinted the parapets of the greatest dam in the world, 727 feet high, six husky workmen spaded away the last thread of earth fill around diversion tunnel No. 1 on the Nevada side. A trickle of water soon grew into a healthy stream and washed into the entrance of this tunnel.

Then a 3,000,000-pound steel gate on tunnel No. 4, on the Arizona side, went down and the river was dammed.

That gate, 12 feet thick, tamed the Colorado. Through the last tunnel remaining open, the No. 1, only enough water, regulated by valves, will be permitted to flow around the dam to meet irrigation needs in southern California's Imperial Valley.

Although Boulder Dam has been under construction since 1930 as a Government project, the actual stopping of the river was a matter of less than one hour. From this time on only such water of the great river as the engineers wish to pass will continue to flow below the dam. All the rest will be stored.

So today a new lake was created. It eventually will extend back about 115 miles from the dam. By June 1, it will be 300 feet deep and extend back 60 miles. That means about 3,000,000 acre-feet of water, about one-tenth the ultimate capacity of the lake. Three to four years will be required of normal river flow to fill the lake.

Power to start the electric work of the project is expected to be generated early next year. Eventually 1,800,000 horsepower will be developed. That is three times as much as the ultimate capacity of any other power development.

U. S. and Brazil Fail to Arrive At Trade Pact

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Difficulties of an apparently serious nature yesterday appeared to have beset on every side Secretary of State Cordell Hull's reciprocal trade program, the latest snag appearing to have developed over an agreement with Brazil.

Only Thursday Secretary Hull was forced to announce the complete collapse of his debt and tr[illegible] negotiations with Soviet Russ[illegible]. Meanwhile George N. Peek, foreign trade adviser to the President and hostile to some parts of the Hull program, succeeded in stirring up a back-fire to the State Department on Capitol Hill.

Announcement of the long-deferred trade agreement with Brazil was confidently expected yesterday. Earlier in the week President Roosevelt let it be known that the agreement would be signed this week in his presence. At the same time State Department attaches worked feverishly with members of the Brazilian finance mission in this country to whip the pact into an acceptable shape.

The negotiators worked late Thursday at the home of Assistant Secretary of State Sumner Welles, but no announcement of agreement was forthcoming. The negotiators worked throughout yesterday and into the night but the latest word was that there could be no assurance that agreement would be reached today, even though the President previously announced he stood ready to interrupt his usual Saturday holiday for the signing ceremony.

The difficulties over the Brazilian agreement are both surprising and mysterious. The Brazilians and American negotiators as far back as December 20 were reported to be in accord on trade terms, but then the Brazilians injected into the discussions proposals for an agreement on their $333,846,000 debt in default in this country. None would discuss the point of dispute that was holding back an agreement.

Mr. Peek aroused sympathy for his trade efforts, some of which are diametrically opposed to the Hull program, at a hearing of the Senate Agriculture Committee. He contended that a division of authority over international trade negotiations was responsible for the continued lag in foreign commerce.

Smith Questions Peek.

He struck a responsive cord in Senator Ellison D. Smith (Democrat), of South Carolina, however, when he said the State Department had blocked his plan to sell 50,000 bales of American cotton to Germany in a barter deal. Senator Smith, a spokesman for the cotton South, as well as chairman of the committee, asked why this was done. Mr. Peek said he had better ask the State Department.

Senator Smith subsequently indicated that he would call Secretary Hull and Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Sayre, in charge of trade negotiations, before the committee to explain why such a substantial cotton sale should have been blocked. The State Department objected to the cotton deal on the ground that it would undermine all it was doing.

Mr. Peek, as he had done previously, contended that American trade should be promoted on a "Yankee trading" basis in which deals would be made in particular commodities with individual countries. This theory is contrary to Secretary Hull's staunchly supported principle of most favored nation trading.

Secretary Hull, commenting on testimony he gave Thursday to the Senate committee, explained that he had no intention of proposing convening of a world economic conference in Washington. He said he simply pointed out in his testimony facts and conditions calculated to increase interest in the necessity for world economic rehabilitation. He declined to venture an opinion on the possibilities of resuming the London Economic Conference at this time.

appropriating $3,300,000,000 to carry out the provisions of the national industrial recovery act, provided the appropriation might be expended 'in the discretion and under the direction of the President,' the authority so vested in the President was sufficiently broad as to permit expenditures from said appropriations in disregard of or even in direct violation of other laws.

"This view overlooks the fact that when an undefined discretion is granted by law it is a legal direction and not a discretion to disregard or to violate statutory law—and that when a broader authority is intended, for instance, active disregard of other laws, the form of legislation long followed by the Congress has been to specifically include the words 'notwithstanding the provisions of other laws' or other words having like meaning."

Regarding the disbursing offices, McCarl said:

"He deliberately made payments resting upon administrative promotions and thereby assumed full responsibility. Had he been unwilling to so assume full responsibility, he was at liberty under the law to submit the question to this office for an authoritative decision for his guidance and protection. If he elected to be guided or persuaded by the views of the law officers in the executive branch, that was his affair. The responsibility for final decision of all questions going into the legal availability of appropriated public monies for a proposed use rests upon this office and its decisions are by law made final and conclusive upon the executive branch."

Mais, Legenza Will Die Today; Both Are Calm

Latter to Go to Chair on Stretcher, Despite Wish 'to Walk Like a Man.'

13 steps to cover the 30 feet that lie between him and death.

Legenza will be carried to his doom on a stretcher, however, despite his wish "to walk to death like a man." He will be the first person with a broken leg ever electrocuted in Virginia.

The half-light of dawn will be upon dingy Spring street when the door between the death cell and the execution chamber is swung back and the first of the two men to go sees the white faces of the witnesses and the oaken chair, above which hang two shaded lights and an ominous cord. Guards and prison chaplains will escort the two across the concrete floor of the little room. Attendants will be ready to carry Mais if he falters or falls.

Before Mrs. Elizabeth Mais, mother of Robert, left for the North she signed a paper forbidding the State taking either body and denying autopsies. Physicians had especially wished to examine the body of Mais, but under Virginia law they will not be permitted to do so. After the gangsters are pronounced dead, their remains will be turned over to a Philadelphia undertaker, who will return them there for burial.

Learn Pleas Are Denied.

Maj. Rice M. Youell, superintendent of the prison, said today that he himself broke the news to the men that their last chance of life had faded with the Governor's denial of pleas of commutation and delay. He said they apparently had scant hope of escaping the penalty, for they took the news stoically.

This afternoon, Mais and Legenza were visited again by the Rev. R. V. Lancaster and Col. Fred Seiler, of the Salvation Army, who conducted another hour's religious service. They were given any special food which they requested. Maj. Youell said today that no stimulant had ever been administered to a condemned man in the Virginia Penitentiary and that he did not expect that Mais and Legenza would prove exceptions to the rule.

The sun rises tomorrow at 7:14 o'clock and it is expected that within 15 minutes the first to die will begin the march to the electrocution chamber which adjoins their cells. Maj. Youell had not decided today which would go first.

Legenza's Cast Removed.

In addition to the 12 persons who will witness each execution and prison guards, the Rev. Dr. Lancaster, with the Rev. Scott Burwell, Negro chaplain, may stand in the little room and watch the switch thrown behind the chair if they so desire. Physicians yesterday removed the cast which has incased Legenza's left leg since it was broken more than a month ago and said that there would be little difficulty in carrying out the sentence of death.

The steel-eyed Legenza and the mild-mannered Mais, who have harassed the police of a dozen States, have turned to religion and spend much time in singing and praying. Neither yet has broken completely under the strain and both may go to the chair with lips sealed regarding many unexplained crimes about which officers seek information.

They'll Carry Mais Too, Member of Gang Says

Fredericksburg, Va., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—"They'll not only have to carry Walter Legenza to the electric chair in Richmond tomorrow morning, but they'll have to take Robert Mais, too," said Edwin Gale, 23-year-old member of the Tri-State gang, who was locked up in City Jail here tonight while being taken back to Georgia to serve the remainder of a 12-year term.

Gale intimated that Mais was yellow and would break down before he began the final walk from his cell to the death chair in State Penitentiary tomorrow morning.

Legenza, he said, was an "all-right" fellow and would, no doubt, walk if he could, but Mais "is a rat."

"I knew them slightly," he said, "but I'm glad I'm not taking that walk tomorrow morning. I'll be passing through there a little later and by that time I expect there won't be any Mais and Legenza."

Gale escaped from a Georgia prison, where he was serving a robbery term. He went to Philadelphia and joined the gang. He was arrested with Martin Farrell, another of the gang.

Police Liquor Racket Charged By Dirksen at Crime Inquiry

Representative William T. Schulte (Democrat), Illinois. Mr. Schulte's charges had been made off the record. Representative Werner said that Mr. Schulte ought to give Maj. Brown the time, the place, the date of the episode, so that the police could trace down the incident. "You've indicted the whole force," Mr. Werner said. "Be specific."

"Mr. Chairman, let's go on with the hearing," Mr. Schulte pleaded to Chairman Randolph, when Mr. Werner pressed him to be specific and detailed about that particular off-the-record charge.

Representative Dirksen gave tentative approval to the proposal of Representative Blanton and others that police disciplinary powers be placed in the hands of a special board. He said that the board would have special investigators at its command.

Maj. Brown said he was no lawyer but could a board legally be prosecutor and judge. He had not come to a conclusion about the Blanton bill, Maj. Brown said.

A force of 50 girls, who would be young and reasonably good-looking and modishly dressed and clothed with police power was proposed by Mr. Schulte.

"Then," the florid Indianan said, "they could arrest on the spot those who annoy women by trying to pick them up."

"That would be very fine," Maj. Brown agreed, "if the courts would not construe the action as enticement. We have to be careful."

Ship Was Attacked Shortly After Sailing

(Copyright, 1935, by The Associated Press.)

Shanghai, Feb. 1.—Seventy-five British, American and Scandinavian school children—more than half of them under 12 years old—were safe tonight aboard the S. S. Tungchow after an adventure with pirates unparalleled even in the fantastic history of Chinese piracy.

A pirate band that attacked the luxurious, British-registered coastal steamer presumably soon after she sailed from Shanghai January 29, killing one of the six Russian guards and wounding the second engineer, abandoned her with their loot off Honghai Bay, advices reaching Shanghai said.

Tonight members of the China Inland Mission, including many parents who passed 36 anxiety-filled hours awaiting word of the Tungchow's fate, gathered informally to celebrate with prayers and expressions of thanksgiving.

Worried About Looting.

The mission colony, however, was worried as to the extent of the looting, since most of the children, who were returning in company with five teachers to the foreign mission school at Chefoo after seven weeks' holiday, carried full outfits for six months of school.

Advices received by the China Navigation Co. here, the agents who chartered the vessel to the China Inland Mission especially to transport the children to Chefoo, indicated the ship was attacked shortly after she sailed.

A Russian sergeant was killed and Second Engineer K. M. MacDonald, of Dunedin, wounded in the chest in the fighting, in which the pirates apparently overpowered the crew and forced the ship's officers to alter the course and steam southward.

Off Honghai Bay, in the pirate-infested area just north of the notorious Bias Bay, the cutthroats left the ship with their booty, fleeing to their lair in the fastness of Bias Bay.

Aircraft Carrier Aids.

The aid of the British aircraft carrier Hermes, planes from which were operating fanwise in exercises off Swatow outside territorial waters, had been requested in the search for the ship.

Advices telling of the safety of the children brought relief to mission colonies up and down the coast still saddened by the recent murder of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Stam, members of the China Inland Mission, by bandits.

Word of the Tungchow's safety came as three British warships scoured Chinese coastal waters searching for her.

The majority of the children aboard the vessel were described as British subjects. Several are Americans, some Scandinavians. Their parents are missionaries, traders, officials and merchants living in China. Many of the children were born here.

Marie McKeever's Bail Is Fixed at $15,000

Philadelphia, Feb. 1 (AP).—Marie McKeever, "girl friend" of Robert Mais, was held today in $15,000 bail by United States Commissioner William S. Wacker for authorities in Baltimore, where she is charged with possessing Government rifles stolen from a Hyattsville, Md., armory.

Agreement was reached that prosecution of the "Tri-State" gangsters in the kidnap-killing of William Weiss would go forward in adjoining Bucks County, where authorities contend the night-life character was slain by his abductors.

The McKeever woman, captured in the same New York round-up which netted Mais, Legenza and two other members of the band two weeks ago, will not be transferred to Baltimore immediately. Arthur M. Eastburn, district attorney of Buck County, said he plans to seek indictments within a week against four of the Mais gangsters, and would hold another member of the gang, the McKeever woman and Mrs. Beatrice Wilkinson, mother of three children, as witnesses in the case.

Political Plea Made on Ships, Inquiry Hears

Firms Were Solicited in Roosevelt Campaign, Evidence Alleges.

(Associated Press.)

An alleged link between politics, shipbuilding and fat contracts for constructing naval vessels was scrutinized yesterday by the Senate Munitions Committee.

It received evidence, in the form of copies of letters, that prominent steelmakers and shipbuilders were solicited for Roosevelt campaign funds in 1932 by Arthur P. Homer, who has been portrayed as a shipbuilder's agent with White House contacts.

"It is apparent that if we are to have a treaty-strength navy," he wrote, "we must have someone other than a pacifist in the White House, and as a treaty-strength navy is of vital importance to you shipbuilders, we believe that the best interests of the country will be served by the election of Gov. Roosevelt, who has full knowledge of the Navy's problems."

Names Those "Contacted."

Senator Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, named these men as the recipients of Homer's communications:

S. W. Wakeman, vice president of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Co.

Clinton L. Bardo, president of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation.

C. Stewart Lee, vice president, Pusey and Jones, Wilmington, Del.

J. C. Pow, president, Sun Shipbuilding and Drydock Co., Chester, Pa.

W. W. Smith, chief engineer, Federal Shipbuilding & Drydock Co., Kearney, N. J.

Charles C. West, president, Manitowoc Shipbuilding Co.

Eugene Grace, chairman, Bethlehem Steel.

"Irregularity" Is Denied.

At Bath, Newell asserted he had done nothing irregular nor illegal to get work for my plant," in commenting on charges previously made before the committee that there was collusion among the shipbuilders in obtaining neval contracts in the summer of 1933.

Testimony Thursday purported to show that three days of negotiation, ending with a session at the White House in July last year, were followed by distribution of building jobs to three companies. The ships are being built with PWA funds.

At his press conference yesterday, President Roosevelt declined to comment but did josh one of his secretaries, Marvin McIntyre, who was reported in Homer's purported diary to have agreed to give President Roosevelt certain telegrams received from the shipbuilders.

He said "Mac" probably had a number of such requests every day and that his "yes" was probably the beginning and end of such transactions.

The committee investigation yesterday brought out a series of denials. Three witnesses—Thomas M. Cornbrooks, vice president of Gulf Industries; Karl Kaltwasser, vice president of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation, and Charles Langell — denied any knowledge of evidence interpreted by committee members as showing collusion in raising the price of cruisers.

Forestation Work Urged in Virginia

State Agriculture Bureau Lists Projects.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 1 (AP).—The State Department of Agriculture today added a list of detailed projects to the proposed program of work projects for Virginia under the revised relief program.

Reforestation of marginal and sub-marginal lands, reclamation of flooded farm land, projects to control plant and animal diseases and establishment of community market and storage facilities were among the matters proposed.

Commissioner George W. Koiner did not estimate the cost of the work but said that the total program would involve expenditure of several million dollars.

portation—buses, trucks, waterways and foreign shipping, as well as the railroads.

The Aviation Commission proposed a separate air commerce commission to govern civil aeronautics, a suggestion that was frowned upon by the President. He is believed to concur, however, in proposals regarding the airmail.

A great deal of thought has been given to setting up a frank subsidy system in place of the present indirect method of including financial aid in mail contracts, Mr. Roosevelt said. For months, the Commerce Department has been tackling it from the viewpoint of the merchant marine, while the Postoffice Department held extended hearings on ocean mail contracts last fall.

Thousands for Letter.

Administration feels the time to act is at hand, when the divorce of subsidies from the mail contracts can be tied in with the whole transportation program. If this is done, it will free the Postoffice Department of a heavy burden and at the same time eliminate a constant source of irritation.

Under the ocean mail contracts now in force, some shipping companies are paid amounts in the hundreds of thousands of dollars for services valued as low as $10 or 50. Reducing this to letters actually carried, it has been figured that in some cases the transportation of one letter costs several thousand dollars.

The House Postoffice Committee, meantime, called hearings for next Monday on the airmail. The White House disclosed that the President is reserving judgment on most of the recommendations of the aviation commission. He intended to convey no opinion of the proposals outlined, except those points covered in his message, it was said.

Defense Handwriting Expert Says Hauptmann Is Innocent

Second Attempt Made to Place Blame on Gang

Witness Accuses Fisch and Violet Sharpe as Kidnapers.

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 1 (AP).—John M. Trendley, 67-year-old handwriting expert from East St. Louis, Ill., carried Bruno Richard Hauptmann's hopes today as the defense opened its fight to convince the jury Hauptmann did not write the Lindbergh ransom notes.

Chief Defense Counsel Edward J. Reilly resumed questioning Trendley. The witness told of examining the Hauptmann writings, the ransom notes and the charts of the State experts.

Q. As a result of your study, are you in a position to render an opinion as to whether Hauptmann wrote the ransom notes?—A. In my opinion, he did not.

Reilly directed the expert to the handwriting charts prepared by Albert S. Osborn, the first handwriting authority who appeared for the State.

Trendley said his examination of the charts of all the State experts showed they did not use the same characters and words as Osborn's as a basis for comparison. He added some experts used some of the same letters and words but not all of them.

Reilly asked Trendley to pick out from Osborn's charts the "D" in "Dear Sir" of the first ransom note. Trendley said neither the letter nor the entire word "Dear" was among the Osborn exhibits.

Trendley examined the Osborn charts further and asserted the word "Sir" of "Dear Sir" and the exclamation point following were not depicted.

Reilly took the nursery note and letter by letter had Trendley tell the jury Osborn had not included the characters pointed out in his photographic chart already in evidence.

Studied Fisch's Handwriting.

Q. Did you examine the handwriting of other persons, particularly Isador Fisch?—A. Yes.

Reilly's question was the first implication of the day that the defense would seek to prove Fisch, Hauptmann's dead business partner, was the writer of the ransom notes.

As Reilly finished examining Trendley on each line of the nursery note and bringing out the words and characters that were not shown on the Osborn charts, he asked each time:

"Am I correct, then, Mr. Trendley, that these lines do not appear on Mr. Osborn's charts, and that you have taken these lines into consideration in forming your opinion?"

"I have," was always the answer.

"The method of the formation of the letters," replied Trendley.

Q. In photographs is it possible to retrace the pattern of a handwriting by the use of the retouching pencil on the negative?—A. No.

Q. Can lines be made longer or shorter by retouching a negative?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Is it possible then to distort writing by the way a negative is printed?—A. Yes, you can do all that with photography.

Q. Is it possible to produce a different slant by the way a writing is photographed?—A. Yes.

Q. And a different shading of the pen strokes?—A. I think you could do so.

Q. If the photographs were made in an artificial kind of light, would not that too make a difference?—A. I don't think so.

Groundwork For Attack.

Reilly, by his series of questions on the photography of handwriting, appeared to be laying the groundwork for an attack on the trueness of the State's photos of the Hauptmann writing which has been used for comparison with the ransom notes.

Reilly indicated a "we" in Hauptmann's writing.

Q. You do not find a "we" like that on the ransom notes?—A. No.

The defense counsel held a chart showing "e's" before the jury while a ransom note was passed among them. He sought to demonstrate Trendley's assertion there was a dissimilarity between ransom note e's and those of Hauptmann.

Reilly, referring to the "were" intended to be "where" in the nursery note, said it was a "peculiar word, an important word, it sticks out."

Trendley examined the charts and reported neither the word nor any combination of its letters was shown.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Osborn say he examined the ransom notes, particularly the nursery note?—A. Yes.

Trendley said there was a difference between Hauptmann's "the's" and those in the nursery note. Osborn, he added, had failed to photograph the nursery note "the's."

Reilly asked Trendley if he considered the "y's" of the nursery note a very distinctive characteristic, and the expert said they were.

Reilly said: "I now begin the second paragraph of the nursery note."

Words Not on Charts.

Trendley said he could not find the first word "we" on the charts.

Q. And not a single symbol on the Osborn charts?—A. No.

Q. From your examination of the nursery note would you say it was written freehand or disguised?—A. It was written disguised.

Q. Part written and part printed?—A. Yes. It is my opinion the left hand may have been used some time.

Reilly drew this deduction from Trendley: That Osborn drew his conclusions of similarity between the nursery note and Hauptmann's writing from the single word "is."

There was no comparison, Trendley testified, in the Hauptmann writings to the writing of "singnature" in the nursery note.

Q. So taking the whole nursery note, Mr. Osborn with 40 years of testifying behind him, picks out the word "is" and compares it with the Hauptmann writing?—A. Yes.

Q. And do you consider it sufficient to send a man to the electric chair?

A prosecution objection was sustained.

"Teutonic Characteristic."

The celebrated "X's" of the ransom notes next came up for discussion. A chart was displayed on the wall showing the letter as if it were two "e's."

Trendley said the unusual "X," which appeared in both ransom and Hauptmann writings, was really a very common form among writers from countries "under Teutonic influence."

Trendley added that he had received "a hundred and some" letters from foreign writers, who hyphenated proper names such as "New-York." This characteristic, the State experts testified, was peculiar to Hauptmann and the kidnap note writings.

Reilly released Trendley for cross-examination.

Joseph A. Lanigan, an assistant to Attorney General David T. Wilentz, took the witness.

Lanigan asked if the witness had offered his services to the defense prior to seeing the original ransom notes.

Trendley said he had proffered his services on September 24, 1934, after seeing certain letters reproduced in a Springfield (Ill.) newspaper. The characters he saw then aroused his interest, he said.

Q. On September 24 you saw a picture of these request writings?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you prepare any charts as customary in a case as big as this? A. I had no chance. We couldn't get the documents from you.

Q. So you had only 2½ hours to examine them?—A. Yes. But I didn't get much chance to look at them. There were several people there, including some ladies, shuffling them around.

Q. When did you get the specimens and writings?—A. About ten days ago, but we've scarcely had time to look at them.

Denies Disagreement.

Q. How many envelopes accompanied the ransom notes?—A. Probably four or five.

Q. Would you be surprised if I told you there were 12? (Trendley did not answer).

Q. You made a cursory examination?—A. I did on the originals. We didn't have the time and you didn't give us the time.

Q. Didn't you and Mr. Myers and Mr. Malone disagree on these ransom notes?—A. No.

Samuel C. Malone and A. P. Myers, both of Baltimore, declined to appear for the defense after examining the writings.

Reilly said at the time that it was because the defense could not pay them.

Trendley, varying earlier testimony, said Osborn's charts gave a "correct pictorial representation" of the ransom writing and Hauptmann's hand.

Trendley said that he could not explain the transposition of letters, as in "hte" for "the."

"My wife," he volunteered, "often does that, and I think she's a pretty well-educated person."

Q. Did you hear Mr. Osborn testify he had examined every word of the ransom writings?—A. I think I did.

Q. Returning to the original exhibits, did you examine the 50 pieces of writing in this case in the presence of eight other persons in 2½ hours?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you call that a cursory examination?—A. Yes.

Q. Highly cursory?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you find any similarities in the Hauptmann writings and the ransom notes—A. Only in that "t."

Q. There are similarities, then?—A. Very few.

Trendley explained he practiced writing with his left hand and concluded that the nursery note was written with the left.

Lanigan directed him to demonstrate, and he wrote a few words on a sheet of paper with each hand.

Suspect's Writing Displayed.

A large photographic enlargement of the Hauptmann request writing was put up on the easel.

Q. Which is the original writing and which is the disguised writing?—A. That was the one where I said the first five lines were different from the rest of the specimens.

Q. But which is the original and which is the request writing?

The witness fumbled with some paper. "I want to see if I have a copy," he said.

"Can't you tell?" snapped Lanigan.

"It is Hauptmann's writing," said the expert at length.

Lanigan asked the witness to step down and show where the disguised hand ceased and the natural writing began.

Trendley said he didn't understand. He said his impression was the chart to which his attention was called was a specimen of Hauptmann writing taken at different intervals.

He said he accepted the specimen, without investigation, as authentic. The State had sought to show on the chart that the disguised hand was evident in Hauptmann's first writing as in the ransom notes.

Q. Do you think these ransom notes are imitated?—A. By another hand.

Q. A natural hand?—A. No. There are all kinds of writing in them.

Q. What other handwriting did you examine?—A. Fisch and Henry Uhlig. Just looking for a clew.

Q. You didn't have any Fisch or Uhlig writing of any importance?

Meant Both Statements.

Lanigan read from the transcript of Trendley's direct testimony in which the expert first said the word "gut" was not distinctive, and a few minutes after he said the word was very distinctive.

The Assistant Attorney General asked him if he wanted to change that testimony, but Trendley said, "No," he meant both apparently contradicting statements.

"That's all," said Lanigan.

Reilly took the witness again and directed him to demonstrate the differences in the wide strokes of the kidnaper's pen and that of Hauptmann.

Odd shading was pointed out by Trendley in the notes. He then was excused.

Peter H. Sommer, a middle-aged fingerprint expert, attached to the New York city administration, was called next as an alibi witness for Hauptmann.

He said he was in Fairview, N. J., giving fingerprint instruction the night of March 1, 1932.

Q. Did you notice any people on the ferry boat?—A. Yes.

Q. Describe them.—A. There were two men, one 5 foot 9, and the other 5 foot 4. They were smoking cigarettes.

Q. Did you get a good look at them?—A. Fairly good look at them.

Q. Do you think you would be able to identify a photograph of one of them? Is that the man?—A. No, but I saw this man on the ferryboat.

Sommers said he sat opposite the man for eight or ten minutes during the river crossing.

Saw Woman With Baby.

The witness said the ferryboat reached the New York side about 12:40 a. m. and he went to the crosstown Forty-second street trolley car. The man he noticed also left the ferry.

Q. What did you see this man do?—A. Him and the other man assisted a woman holding a baby onto a trolley car.

He described the woman as very nervous, as though "ready to jump out." She was dressed in a brown coat with brown fur cuffs and wore a pearl necklace.

"The baby was blond, about 2 years old," he added.

Q. When you went home that night did you report the incident to the police?—A. No, I told my folks—

Q. Well, when did you learn the Lindbergh baby was kidnaped?—A. At 10:45 the next morning, March 2, 1932, when it came over the radio.

Q. Did you report it eventually to police?—A. Yes, that very day, to Detective Mullaney at the Eighty-first Precinct Station, Fulton street, Brooklyn.

Q. Ever do anything else?—A. Yes, I wrote to the State police at Trenton, N. J.

Q. Did the police ever investigate you and your story?—A. No, never.

Reilly gave the witness over for cross-examination.

Wilentz brought out that Sommer made no effort to reach the police immediately after Hauptmann's arrest.

The police, he added, once at headquarters, took his story but told him that there were hundreds of reports of "men with babies" that night.

The taller man, Sommer recalled, he had seen again on the trolley, but he could not tell whether the short man with him was the same he had observed on the boat.

Wilentz showed him a small photograph to identify the short man, but he declined to say "it was or it wasn't."

Q. Were you mixed up when you answered Mr. Reilly?—A. I won't answer that.

Q. Now did you see the two men you saw on the trolley car afterward when you got on the ferryboat?—A. I did.

Q. A few minutes ago, sir, you said you never saw the short man you saw on the trolley car when you got on the boat?

The bespectacled witness, frowning, his fingers at his mouth, again accused the attorney general of "mixing him up."

Wilentz struggled for several minutes trying to untangle the mystery of the short man on the Jersey car and the short man on the ferryboat. He finally abandoned the subject and turned to the description of the woman with the blonde baby on the Forty-second street crosstown in New York.

Sommer described the woman as about 5 foot 6 or 7 inches "medium built," dark hair and attractive.

The men, he testified, went to an automobile after assisting the woman on the trolley.

The child's blanket slipped, he added, and he was able to see the baby.

The men, the witness added, met the woman outside the New York ferry house. He was not certain she came from the car.

"I don't know where they met the woman," Sommer summed up.

Wilentz showed the witness a picture of Violet Sharpe, the Morrow maid, who committed suicide during the kidnap investigation, and asked if that was the woman he saw with the baby.

"She bears a very strong resemblance," Sommers said.

Q. Would you say it was she?—A. I wouldn't say yes. I wouldn't say no. I wouldn't swear it was her.

Wilentz again showed Sommer the photo of a man and asked if it was the man on the boat.

"I wouldn't say 'yes' and I wouldn't say 'no.' In a way he resembles him and in a way he doesn't," was Sommer's uncertain reply.

Wilentz asked if Sommer had ever seen a picture of the man exhibited by Reilly before coming to court today.

"I wouldn't say I did and I wouldn't say I didn't," the witness replied.

Col. Lindbergh smiled at the reply.

Reilly sought to continue the questioning but Justice Trenchard called the adjournment.

Bruno Should Plead Guilty, State Claims

Has No Defense, Declares Prosecutor; Sees Verdict Next Saturday.

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 1 (AP). Bruno Richard Hauptmann's prosecutors said tonight they expected to have little rebuttal testimony.

George K. Large, of the State staff, said that unless more substantial testimony was presented in behalf of Hauptmann, the prosecution rebuttal evidence would not continue more than a day.

He gave a "curbstone" opinion that the verdict would be reached a week from tomorrow.

"A person who has no more defense than that," said Large, at the end of the week of defense testimony, "ought to plead guilty. Obviously the rebuttal by the State is being reduced by the breakdown of the defense witnesses. What is there to rebut?"

The attorney asserted that the State had created doubt of the stories of almost every witness the defense had offered and was not in need of giving further refutation in rebuttal.

The State has had Clark Sellers, San Francisco handwriting expert, checking the testimony of J. M. Trendley, the defense expert from East St. Louis, who said on the stand that Hauptmann did not write the ransom notes.

Sellers and Albert D. Osborn, of New York, may be recalled as rebuttal witnesses, as will Arthur J. Koehler, the Wisconsin wood expert, who testified that materials in the kidnap ladder came from Hauptmann's attic. The defense, the State has learned, may offer a wood expert in an effort to upset Koehler's testimony.

Kansas Bank Robbed, 6 Hostages Kidnaped

Smith Center, Kan., Feb. 1 (U.P.).—Three men, one of them masked, two of them carrying submachine guns, looted the First National Bank of $1,500 here today. In their flight they kidnaped six bank employes, two of them women.

The women were placed in the rear seat of the bandit car and the men were forced to ride on the running boards, two on each side. The bandits robbed their hostages, taking rings and purses, before releasing them several miles from town.

Wilentz Scoffs After Witness Accuses Maid

State Has Proof She Was Not Involved in Crime, He Declares.

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 1 (AP).—The prosecution in the Hauptmann kidnap slaying trial was undisturbed tonight by the defense testimony about Violet Sharpe, dead maid of the Morrow household, as a possible suspect in the crime.

The defense produced her picture during the examination of Peter Sommer, a former fingerprint expert of the New York City administration, and he gave a partial identification as a woman he had seen carrying a blond baby on a trolley car the night of the kidnaping.

The investigators of the crime have made a thorough inquiry into the whereabouts of the Morrow maid the night of the kidnaping and have exonerated her. Her suicide was explained as due to a nervous condition induced partially by the excitement of the incident and to her recent recovery from a tonsil operation.

Commenting on the defense suggestion that the woman on the trolley with the blond baby was Miss Sharpe and on other reports that put her in an automobile near the Yonkers ferry, Attorney General David T. Wilentz said:

"We have absolute proof that she was somewhere else."

Statements by two persons that they went riding with Miss Sharpe on the night of March 1 tended to clear her of any suspicion in connection with the crime.

Witness Names Isador Fisch and Violet Sharpe as Kidnapers

Violet Sharpe, Fisch Accused As Kidnapers

Witness Swears He Saw Morrow Maid Flee With Baby.

a maze of contradictions until at last the witness sat back sullenly in his chair and kept repeating:

"I won't say yes and I won't say no."

Who the second man in this story was, nobody knows. Wilentz attempted to trap the witness into identifying a picture of a convict, whose name was not revealed, as that of the companion of Fisch and Miss Sharpe. Sommer peered at the photograph through his glasses and said:

"I won't say that is the man I saw and I won't say it isn't. You're trying to mix me up."

"Did you ever see the short man again?"

"No."

Wilentz strolled around the courtroom asking trivial questions and then shot this one in:

"Did you ever see the two men on a street car or on a ferry again?"

"Yes."

Wilentz leaped at him:

"You just told me you never did see the short man again."

"I may have been mixed up a minute ago."

"Describe the woman you saw getting on the street car."

"She was 5 feet, 6 or 7 inches, of medium build with dark hair and a brown coat."

Ordered to Answer.

"You know that because you saw her on the street car?"

"Yes."

"A moment ago you told me you didn't see her after she got on the street car."

The witness brushed his hand across his mouth and did not answer.

"Where did the men meet the woman and the baby?"

"They met her beside the ferry house."

Wilentz then picked up the same picture of Violet Sharpe that Reilly had shown to the witness and asked:

"You never saw this woman's picture before, did you?"

"I might have," Sommer said cautiously.

"Didn't you say on direct examination that the woman you saw with the baby resembled this picture?"

"Yes."

"But now you wouldn't say definitely that this was the woman?"

"It might have been somebody else."

So now—one week after the State rested its case and the defense began calling witnesses—it becomes clear what line of strategy Hauptmann's lawyers will pursue.

Seek to Blame Gang.

They will try to prove that a gang kidnaped the baby and that Isidor Fisch was a member of that gang. That will explain how Fisch got the ransom money which he is supposed to have left with Hauptmann when he sailed off to Germany to die.

Hauptmann could not have committed the crime alone—as the indictment charges—because he was in Christian Fredericksen's bakery on the night of March 1 and there are four people who have sworn to it—Mrs. Hauptmann, Louis Kiss, August Van Henke and Elbert Carlstrom.

Furthermore, Hauptmann did not write the 14 ransom notes, as eight State experts said he did, because J. M. Trendley, of East St. Louis, Ill., a defense handwriting expert, testified today that all the notes were written by a left-handed man who was trying to disguise his script. Hauptmann is right handed.

A mysterious postcard that appeared at the defense table today indicates that Reilly may attempt to prove that Fisch made Hauptmann the innocent victim of the whole business—that he imitated Hauptmann's handwriting in the ransom notes and that, when he knew he was about to die, he said. "Hauptmann certainly didn't write them."

Trendley said it was comparatively simple to imitate another person's handwriting. He demonstrated by asking a newspaperman to sign his name on a piece of paper. Trendley glanced at it quickly, turned away and reproduced the signature.

Blow to Defense.

The State dealt a hard blow to Hauptmann at the opening of today's session when it produced in court the records of Bellevue Hospital in New York.

Louis Kiss, one of the witnesses who said he saw Hauptmann in Fredericksen's bakery on the night of the kidnaping, testified that he remembered the date because he had taken his son to Bellevue to be treated for a kidney ailment exactly a week before. It was on February 22, 1932 — George Washington's birthday—he said, that the child was stricken. At 1 a. m. on the morning of February 23, Kiss added, the boy was taken to the hospital.

Bellevue's records, the State showed today, indicated Kiss' son was admitted at 1 a. m. February 22, 1932. Thus, if he was in Fredericksen's bakery exactly a week before, he was not there the night of the kidnaping at all, but, instead, was there on the night of February 29.

Reilly told the court today he expected to rest the defense's case by Thursday. He will go to New York over the week-end, he said, to interview witnesses.

Cutter Saves Two Trapped On Icy Isle at River's Mouth

Aboard Coast Guard Cutter Apache, Lower Chesapeake Bay, Feb. 1 (AP) (by radio).—Two half-frozen men, one of them ill with the grippe, were rescued from ten days' isolation on the ice-covered, wind-swept Holland Island near the mouth of the Potoma River today by the Apache.

Dispatched to rescue Cornelius Wallace, a deputy game agent for the United States Biological Survey, from the uninhabited island, the cutter found James Sneade, a trapper, on the island with Wallace.

Wallace had been confined to bed in a hunting lodge on the island since Monday with the grippe. It was with difficulty that he, assisted by the trapper, made the way across the frozen ice near the shore to a launch sent out from the Apache to bring the men aboard.

Wallace was on the lonely island during the cold wave which sent temperatures below zero in unprotected places on the Chesapeake Bay. He went from his home on Hooper's Island in a patrol boat to conduct fowl survey work.

When he completed his task, Sunday, he found his boat was frozen in the ice. Before then, he had been joined by Sneade, whose home is on Smiths Island.

Wallace's illness was made more serious by the fact he had no medical supplies and his food supplies were rapidly dwindling. Extreme hardship and possibly death, however, was averted by the fact he was able to find refuge in the hunting lodge.

Holland Island, once inhabited, is used now only for hunting.

When the Biological Survey in Washington received no word from Wallace, a Coast Guard plane was sent to investigate. It dropped food to him and Sneade yesterday, telling them the Apache was on the way to rescue them.

As double insurance of rescue, a dirigible also put out from Washington today to pick the men up if the cutter failed. Its services were not required, since the Apache was able to make the rescue.

Wallace told a story of desolation wrought in the wild life of the region by the cold. He said thousands of ducks and geese starved or froze to death during the cold wave of the last 10 days.

He said that, before he became ill, he and Sneade amused themselves "fishing" for sea gulls. He put old meat on the end of a line to catch the gulls, made tame and incautious by the cold, he said.

Mrs. Hauptmann's Pen Found in Pennsylvania

Greencastle, Pa., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—A green fountain pen bearing the printed name of Anna Hauptmann came to light in Greencastle today.

The pen was left at Parnell Tavern on the Lincoln highway 14 miles from here some time prior to May 1, 1932, and never was claimed. It remained among the possessions of the former proprietress of the tavern, who now resides in Greencastle, and the name was not noticed until this morning, when the pen turned up during housecleaning.

Letter to Byrd Flays New Deal And Roosevelt

Every Phase of Emergency Program Evokes Wrath of Virginia Lawyer.

A broadside attack on President Roosevelt and the Congress, which has supported him, was made here yesterday by Charles Hall Davis, a Petersburg (Va.), attorney, in an open letter to Senator Harry Flood Byrd, the Associated Press reported.

The letter was not made public by Byrd, but by a friend of Davis'.

Davis accused the President and Congress of "surrender and betrayal of American rights and liberties" and "attempts to supplant the American theory and plan of government with the theories and plans of the Socialist school."

The result will be, Davis said, that "Governmnet will become the master of the people."

Practically every phase of the Administration's emergency program was attacked. The alphabetical agencies were the subject of one section.

Senator Byrd's record was the subject of another. In that, Davis wrote:

"As a member of the Senate, while you have protested and voted against some of the most obviously unconstitutional and outrageous of these tyrannous unsurpations of power, you have generally supported the Administration in its rape of American liberties, its repudiation of American political philosophy and its violation of constitutional limitations on delegated power."

He asked the Senator to answer 23 questions relating to the theory of American government.

Davis described himself as "a private citizen of Virginia" and a voter of the Democratic ticket for 41 years. He said he voted for Mr. Roosevelt and had supported Byrd.

State to Discuss Relief Revenues

Maryland Expert Will Analyze Sources.

Frederick, Md., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—Plans were completed today for a public meeting at the courthouse tomorrow at which Prof. W. P. Walker, assistant agricultural economist of the extension service, University of Maryland, will discuss sources of revenue the State administration will likely consider for relief purposes. The meeting is being sponsored by the farm bureau.

Prof. Walker, who is associated with Dr. S. H. DeValt, professor of agricultural economics at the State university, in compiling tax statistics, will refer to the proposed State income tax, sales and property tax and other sources of revenue for taxes. The farm bureau and grange have gone on record favoring an income tax and the farm bureau is opposed to any extra tax on real estate.

Thomas S. Anderson, secretary-treasurer of the Frederick Production Credit Association, embracing Frederick, Washington, Allegany, Garrett, Montgomery and Carroll counties, a unit of the Federal Farm Credit Administration, will speak on how farmers may obtain loans for the purchase of seed, fertilizer, livestock, farming implements, repair to farm buildings and refinancing obligations.

Dr. Lyon Gardiner Tyler Critically Ill at 82

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—Dr. Lyon Gardiner Tyler, president emeritus of the College of William and Mary and son of John Tyler, tenth President of the United States, is critically ill at his home at Holdcroft, Charles City County. He is in his 82d year.

He is suffering from influenza, Mrs. Tyler said.

Minister Will Assume Front Royal Pastorate

Front Royal, Va., Feb. 1. (Spl.).—The Rev. W. Emory Trainham will begin his pastorate at the First Baptist Church here February 10. He was recently called from Laurinburg, N. C., to succeed the Rev. T. Eugene West, who is now associate to Rev. Henry Alfred Porter, D. D., of the First Baptist Church of Charlottesville.

Mr. Trainham is a native of Richmond and was graduated from the University of Richmond, and spent three years at Southern Baptist Seminary, Louisville, Ky. He holds a bachelor of divinity degree from Crozier Seminary, Chester, Pa. He served a five-year pastorate in Cartersville, Ga., and comes here after a pastorate in Laurinburg.

Carbon Gas From Bus In Ditch Overcomes 4

Fredericksburg, Va., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—Four colored passengers on a southbound bus which skidded from the ice-coated Richmond-Washington highway 12 miles north of here late last night, were recovering today from the effects of carbon monoxide fumes which spread as efforts were being made to pull the machine back to the road. It was believed an exhaust pipe had been choked.

'Imposed' Code In Auto Field Rankles NRA

Board Opposed Changes as Approved by the President.

code, affecting 60,000 workers, had been "lost" at the White House.

The NRA Board divided evenly on the code, Williams, a cigarette manufacturer, declining to vote. The divided recommendations were sent to the White House early last week, after nearly a year's work by NRA. When asked about the code at his press conference, the President said that it had been lost. He said he and Marvin McIntyre, one of his secretaries, had looked through the basket in which it was supposed to be and it could not be found.

The President also declared that the report of the research and planning division of NRA on labor conditions in the automobile industry had been lost. This report had been ordered by the President and was intended to be the basis for automobile code changes.

Smarting under what he looked upon as a snub by the Administration, Green told a Senate judiciary sub-committee in reference to the automobile code that "we will not accept it, recognize it, or yield to it." The Federation, however, was revealed in a recent election to represent only 5 per cent of the automobile workers, and its refusal to accept the new code is not expected by officials to result in serious consequences. One NRA official indicated that the NRA did not believe Green had any authority to speak for motor workers.

This was in contrast to the situation last spring when Gen. Hugh S. Johnson and President Roosevelt spent days consulting with an A. F. of L. committee of automobile workers. Those conferences resulted in formation of the Automobile Labor Board headed by Dr. Leo Wolman, and which the A. F. of L. has denounced.

Snub to A. F. L. Explained.

President Roosevelt said that he had not felt it necessary to consult with the A. F. of L. because that organization had made its attitude plain when it withdrew from the Wolman board, declaring it would rather have no code at all than have the board continued. The President denied that the Wolman board had been made a part of the code organization, although Richberg and Williams had announced the order continuing existence of the board as an amendment to the code.

The federation council in its statement said it saw in the code's extension "the hostile influence of Mr. Richberg and Mr. Wolman to the American Federation of Labor."

"Mr. Richberg, who seems to be the chief actor in the whole code proceeding," it added, "does not speak for labor, nor is he authorized to act for labor. The executive council regards Mr. Richberg as out of sympathy with the aims and purposes of labor."

The council asserted "the code with all its objectionable features was imposed upon labor and this was done in spite of the fact that labor pleaded for the opportunity to be heard."

Fall Buying Boom Seen.

Green said last night President Roosevelt had told him in a letter November 2 that he would consult with representatives of labor before final action was taken on code renewal, but added this was not done.

Meanwhile, the Automobile Manufacturers Association, representing all important manufacturers except Ford, announced in detail plans of operation under the amended code. It announced that time for producing new models would be changed from January 1 to approximately October 1, and introduction of new models would be confined to a period within 60 days before and after that date. This will be done in the interest of distributing employment over a longer period.

The hope is that fall buying will be stimulated. The report contained figures showing that at present the smallest percentage of car sales occur in November and December and the largest in April, May and June. Automobile shows are expected to be held in November instead of in January.

Long Charges New Assassin Plot

Huey Resumes Probe of 'Insurrection', in Louisiana.

had been Tobe Leblanc, who admitted taking part in last Saturday's "battle of the airport," in which members of the anti-Long Square Deal Association lined up menacingly against National Guardsmen who were enforcing martial law for Long's dictatorship.

Leblanc testified that Ernest J. Bourgeois, president of the Square Dealers, had accidentally shot George Alessi, Tangipahoa parish police juror, mysteriously wounded during the airport fiasco.

Bourgeois, missing since the episode, returned to the city today to call an "unarmed mobilization of Square Dealers," and was promptly arrested by militiamen, to be released later.

Leblanc bantered with Long, who questioned all the witnesses.

"What's your name? I have heard you called Huey, Senator, Crawfish, Kingfish and Assistant Governor."

"I'm Lawyer Long right now," he was told.

Leblanc then "revealed" internal dissension among leaders of the Square Deal movement, which is pledged to overthrow Long's dictatorship.

Curses His Leader.

The Square Dealers had assembled among trees at the north end of the airport, to meet the advancing soldiers. They held their positions nearly an hour, while troops lay on the ground with upraised rifles 200 yards away. Finally the Square Dealers came from the trees and surrendered. Bourgeois had been seen hopping a ditch and fleeing into the woods in the opposite direction.

Leblanc cursed Bourgeois on the witness stand and said: "I saw Bourgeois working the action of his pump gun and heard it explode. Then I saw Alessi stagger and somebody yelled 'Look-a yonder, there's a man been shot.'" Leblanc agreed the shooting was accidental.

At this point Long ordered troops to release Bourgeois. "And don't let him get hurt, we don't want any more casualties in this war," the dictator remarked with a guffaw.

A score other witnesses were called. Most of them said they were employed by the Standard Oil Co. The Kingfish blames the Standard Oil Co. for abetting the "revolution."

The witnesses admitted taking part in the airport encounter. Some said they went armed, on instructions from Square Deal headquarters. Others said they had no guns.

"Reign of Terror."

Troops had set up machine guns on the steps of the State Capitol Building to guard Long's investigation and National Guardsmen and secret State police waged a reign of terror against Square Dealers throughout the day to keep down demonstrations.

Bourgeois had set the hour for Long's return for a "massed and unarmed uprising" of Square Dealers, which failed to materialize.

Meantime, Bourgeois and Mrs. J. S. Roussell, president of the Women's Auxiliary of Square Dealers, had sent new appeals to President Roosevelt, asking Federal intervention. They said armed revolt was imminent and "blood may soon flow in the streets."

Long reached his domain at 7:20 a. m., detraining at New Orleans. Leon Trice, press photographer, rushed up to get a picture. Joe Messina, Long's bodyguard, smashed Trice in the mouth, knocking him to the ground and breaking his camera.

A force of Long's secret police rushed up and threw a cordon around him. They escorted him to Baton Rouge, where military authorities, acting under Gov. Allen's martial law proclamation, had the hippodrome in order for the investigation.

Long clashed with Representative George M. Lester in a hotel lobby. Inadvertently, Lester got in Long's way. "Move aside there," the Kingfish demanded. Lester is outstanding among Long's enemies in the State Legislature. Long recognized him and accompanied his remark with a blow to the chest. Lester stumbled aside, but was not injured.

(Associated Press.)

Huey Long, away to the wars in Louisiana, underwent a flank attack yesterday in Washington.

A home State foe in Congress, Representative Sanders, hammered the Long machine with verbal rounds of "dictatorship," "coercion" and "intimidation." The capital of the Long empire, Baton Rouge, Sanders told the House, "refused to bow the knee to Baal," and thereupon found its citizens "stripped of their suffrage."

REPRESENTATIVE JARED Y. SANDERS, of Louisiana, who declared before the House that conditions in Louisiana under Senator Huey Long are comparable to an "Asiatic dictatorship."

Fernandez to Defense.

The Long organization, however, had its defender in the House in the person of Joachim O. Fernandez. He said "elections in Louisiana are fair and square." Some House members laughed audibly.

Fernandez said that Sanders—who defeated a Long-backed candidate for Congress—was "unnecessarily alarmed over conditions in Louisiana today."

A packed House and crowded galleries heard Sanders declare:

"I say to you that in the event of a trial of political enemies of the present regime in Louisiana, a fair trial is an impossibility, conviction would be foreordained and predetermined, and any official or any judge who stood in the way would be removed and superseded by others obedient to the dominant faction, upon orders of the chief executive or by the Supreme Court of Louisiana."

Sanders said Democratic government in Louisiana was "being displaced by the Asiatic conception of government of an all-powerful chief executive who rules the whole people for the benefit of the dominant faction or class." He said this was the conception underlying the Hitler and Stalin governments.

Martial law in Baton Rouge "this day and hour," Sanders asserted, was because "this little community had refused to bow the knee to Baal."

He scoffed at talk of alleged plots "to assassinate the principal spokesman of the dominant faction in Louisiana."

To the suggestions of Representative Blanton (De.nocrat), Texas, that he employ a bodyguard, Sanders asserted that he needed none "in Louisiana or anywhere else."

"The conflict now being fought in Louisiana presages a conflict that will soon be fought throughout the United States," Sanders concluded. "Shall we discard democracy and set up a government by dictatorship?"

Dictatorship Denied.

Fernandez, in a 20-minute reply, said:

"My distinguished friend from Louisiana said that we have a dictatorship.

"Why, my good friends, we have 100 members in the House and 39 State Senators, and every man is consulted just as members of the national House and Senate are. It's not one man—it's a majority of the House and Senate."

Pressed by Blanton, Fernandez conceded he would not have been elected if he had been against what was known as the Long machine because the people are with Senator Long."

Stepping over and looking directly at Sanders, Fernandez said:

"I have no desire to wash our political linen up here any further, but I may say that my head may waver and my feet may falter, but never shall I do anything against the honor or glory of the fair State of Louisiana for my own political advancement or personal aggrandizement."

President Acts To Reduce Cost Of Social Set-up

Hundreds of Millions Cut, Deletion of 'Charity', Reported on Hill.

ers, domestics and casuals from the pension and job insurance provisions of the bill. This change, it was said, had not been definitely agreed upon.

Congressional committee members have heard numerous witnesses testify that if unemployment insurance were left in the hands of a social insurance board, it would appear to smack of charity.

Huge Sums Protested.

Similarly, actuaries have calculated that the payment of "unearned" annuities would cost huge sums. An "unearned" annuity is this:

When the bill becomes effective, a man of 45 could begin paying any sum he desired, annually, to the old age pension fund. When he reached 65, the money would be returned to him in, perhaps, monthly instalments. But to his donations, the Federal Government would add a sum equal to what he would have contributed had he started making donations when he was 21.

Difficulties and the enormity of the job of administration have been advanced as reasons for the third projected change.

Despite an Administration urge for enactment of the security program by February 15, Chairman Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi, of the Senate Finance Committee, said there was "not a chance in the world" for it to get through by then. Chairman Doughton (Democrat), of North Carolina, of the House Ways and Means Committee, said "I feel sure the House will pass the bill by then."

Townsend Makes Veiled Threat.

At the Capitol, meanwhile, the House Ways and Means Committee heard 68-year-old Dr. F. E. Townsend, of Long Beach, Calif., discuss his $200-a-month old-age pension plan.

After the busy committee members waited 16 minutes for his arrival from a bed in Johns Hopkins Hospital at Baltimore, the primary thing they got from him was an undisguised warning that their political futures might be endangered unless they supported his plan.

Talking about "twenty to thirty millions" people who had signed Townsend petitions, he said, "it is only fair to state that they are watching closely your actions and will be guided accordingly."

State Grants 5,100 Paroles.

Montgomery, Ala., Feb. 1 (AP).—Gov. Bibb Graves in a general order today granted permanent paroles to more than 5,100 county convicts convicted in misdemeanor cases who had been temporarily paroled by former Gov. B. M. Miller until February 15.

Strength in Army Urged by Il Duce

Tells Black Shirts to Be Soldiers and Workers.

Rome, Feb. 1 (U.P.).—Premier Benito Mussolini called upon the Italian people today to be "workers and soldiers at the same time," and told 10,000 of his picked Black Shirt militia that in Europe today "it is strength that really counts."

Il Duce, entering the historic Borghese Gardens to receive the oath of allegiance from 10,000 instructors in the juvenile Fascist army, ascended to a platform high above the roaring throng gathered below him in the Piazza Di Sienna.

He told his people their strength lay in preparedness for conflict, even to going across the frontiers, if necessary, to protect Italy.

Gas Execution Voted.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Feb. 1 (AP).—Lethal gas was substituted for hanging as the official method of execution in Wyoming today. Gov. Leslie A. Miller signed a bill passed by the Legislature which is similar to the laws already in effect in Nevada and Colorado.

On the Air Today

By Katherine Smith.

NEW YORK news sources say that the amateur nights are stirring up a lot of discussion. The pro and con centers around the wisdom of displaying this talent on the networks. Some think it's "cruel" to promote amateur talent, then let them down with a thud; others believe it is an incentive for bigger and better things.

Although part of Fred Allen's air show deals with amateurs, he himself believes that most aren't ready for network programs and that a lot of them "do not have a chance." Maj. Edward Bowes, who amateurs on a New York station, says he has long encouraged home talent and thinks amateur programs help the beginner. John Royal, N. B. C. program vice president, has an in-between view. He thinks amateur programs demonstrate just how good a finished program might be.

The ping-pong match between Lee Poe Hart and "Red" Leggett will decide the Press Club supremacy in the game. At 1:30 WJSV presents the thrilling sports event. Arch McDonald will describe proceedings.

Best musical event today is the Metropolitan Opera broadcast on both NBC stations. "Die Walkuere," by Wagner, is sung by Kirsteb Flagsted as Sieglinde, Paul Althause as Siegmund; Emanuel List as Hunding, Friedrich Schorr as Wotan and Gertrude Kappel as Bruennhilde. Arthur Brodanski will conduct and Geraldine Farrar acts as commentator. Also, O. B. Hanson, NBC chief engineer, will tell you the technicalities of grand opera broadcasting.

Will Irwin, author-lecturer, and Edward P. Mulrooney, former Police Commissioner of New York, will discuss "Crime Control" at the National Republican Club luncheon, WRC, 1:00 p. m.

STUDENT views are part of WMAL's schedule when two student editors carry on discussions of questions of current interest. This round-robin goes on WMAL at 6:00 p. m.

Other events today: Richard Bonelli starts his series with Kostelanetz, WJSV, 9 p. m. . . . Richard Himber goes on the air over WJSV, at 9:30 p. m. . . . Another WJSV feature is the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music program featuring Bach's Concerto for three pianos. At 11 a. m. . . . Sigmund Romberg chooses numbers from "Faust" and "Midsummer Night's Dream," WRC, 8 p. m. . . . Roxy pays musical tribute to Victor Herbert, WJSV, 8 p. m. . . . A new series of concert programs directed by Estelle Wentworth comes over WOL, at 7 p.m.

WJSV reports that Arch McDonald's program on Sunday will move down to 6:45 p. m. beginning tomorrow. . . . Also that Larry Walker, air veteran, will sing and accompany himself for WJSV on Monday, Wednesday and Friday regularly.

The Federal Diary

(Trade-Mark Applied For.)

By Morgan Baker.

HEARINGS are expected to begin early next week on the Sirovich civil service bill, which is regarded as the most sweeping of the Federal personnel measures introduced since the pay cut was repealed.

BAKER.

The author, Representative William I. Sirovich, of New York, has been named head of a special committee to conduct the hearings. Serving with Mr. Sirovich are Representatives C. Elmer Dietrich, of Pennsylvania; Cleveland Dear, of Louisiana; Herron Pearson, of Tennessee; John H. Tolen, of California; Frederick R. Lehlbach, of New Jersey, and Edith Nourse Rogers, of Massachusetts.

The bill provides for extension of the merit system throughout the Government service; several changes liberalizing the retirement laws and particularly for optional 30-year retirement; extension of classification to the field service; a new classification system and establishment of a civil service board of appeals.

The bill also would abolish the present efficiency rating system and establish automatic promotions in their stead.

The American Federation of Government Employes is strongly supporting the Sirovich bill, which embodies many items in the federation's legislative program.

Nils A. Olsen, chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, addressed the annual meeting of the Association of Southern Agricultural Workers at Atlanta, Ga., this week, and pointed out that the bureau is investigating a number of situations that have developed recently in the world cotton production and manufacturing business.

Richard P. Lane, junior library assistant, Division of Cotton and Other Fiber Crops and Diseases, Bureau of Plant Industry, has compiled a 150-page annotated bibliography on "Cotton and Cottonseed," comprising a list of the publications of the Department of Agriculture on these subjects, including early reports of the Patent Office, and an extensive subject and author index. It has just been published by Agriculture.

National Park Service Interior, will spend $2,000 for studies and the preparation of a general landscaping plan for the White House Grounds under a PWA allotment.

Appreciation of good planning of farmhouses and buildings seems to be growing among farm families, judging from inquiries received about new homes and about remodeling of old ones, according to Wallace Ashby, (F), Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

Ernest Klinge, president; Vernon R. Richards, vice president; C. C. Pigeon, treasurer, and Miss E. L. Morse, (P), secretary. On the executive committee are A. E. Donally, M. K. Knotts, J. Hall, P. Federico, N. T. Ball, W. B. Clapham, J. Blair, C. O. Davis and E. W. Chapin.

Disagreement With Russia.

Negotiations for a debt and trade agreement between the United States and Soviet Russia have broken down because of a fundamental difference in viewpoints. The State Department agreed to a drastic scaling down of the Russian debt to this country, and was willing to extend credit to American manufacturers to enable them to sell goods to the Soviet on the installment plan. The Soviet did not object to paying the reduced debt in the form of excess interest on a new loan which it sought to facilitate its program of internal development. But in regard to the manner of extending credits the two governments are in sharp disagreement.

In the first place, Russia was not satisfied with the indirect credit system proposed by the State Department. Indications are that Moscow officials were willing to use American funds placed at their disposal to finance purchases in this country. But they wanted these funds in the form of a direct loan to the Soviet government. Negotiators for this country quite properly refused to consider such use of taxpayers' money.

From the Soviet point of view, the advantages of a direct loan are obvious. It would strengthen the prestige of the Soviet both economically and politically. A loan direct from the United States Government might be used as a lever in securing similar concessions from other countries. But it would completely change the nature of the agreement which the State Department proposed to make. Instead of being a commercial loan, it would become a political transaction of an unprecedented character. The State Department will have all but universal support in its refusal to create a direct new debt as a condition for securing small payments on existing obligations.

In the second place, the term of the projected credits has proved a source of conflict. The State Department offered to vary the length of credit granted according to the different categories of the goods involved. The Russians assert that acceptance of short-term credits might reopen European debt claims against the Soviet, which amount to many times the sum of American claims. Between the two viewpoints there is a wide gulf. But the complete failure to bridge it is highly unsatisfactory to both governments. In spite of Secretary Hull's gloomy conviction that the negotiations "must now be regarded as having come to an end," it may be hoped that the issue has not been finally dropped. Restoration of normal trade relations between the two countries is sufficiently important to warrant continued efforts to achieve a mutually acceptable settlement.

Extending The Auto Code.

The automobile code has been extended by President Roosevelt for a period of four and one-half months, with two important changes. One is designed to reduce the extremely seasonal character of operations by providing for the introduction of new car models in the fall. The other calls for time and one-half pay for overtime in excess of 48 hours.

Despite these concessions, which are designed to introduce a greater degree of regularity into employment within the industry, President Green of the A. F. of L. has publicly protested against the code. He says that organized labor "will not accept it, not recognize it, not yield to it." While the concessions fall far short of the demands of Mr. Green's organization for a 30-hour week, and while they will not completely eliminate peaks and depressions in the industry, they are certainly a move in the right direction.

Automobile manufacturers can not be expected to metamorphose their methods of operation without regard to the effect upon sales, or to institute further drastic reductions in working hours that would cut down the volume of business by sharply raising costs and prices of their products. Reforms of this sort only benefit labor if introduced gradually, and it is hard to believe that the attitude of the A. F. of L. is adequately explained by the reasons given.

It seems more probable that Mr. Green's objections to the code grow out of antagonism to the arrangements governing collective bargaining which provide for proportional representation. And yet without proportional representation, so recent elections indicate, the A. F. of L. as a minority group would have no right to express any opinion on the policy of the automobile industry.

With numerous decisions testifying to the conscientiousness with which the board has endeavored to prevent workers from being discriminated against because of union activities, it is impossible to believe that the A. F. of L., which controls at best less than 15 per cent of automobile workers, is entitled to speak authoritatively for labor in that industry. That organization already has one of its members upon the Automobile Labor Board to protest against any unjustified discrimination, and every precaution has been taken to assure the representative character of the bargaining negotiations within the industry.

It will not be helpful to the federation if these mitigating facts fail to produce any impression upon A. F. of L. leaders who are committed to advocacy of the 30-hour week without regard to the ability of the industry to support the increased costs of such an experiment.

A Transportation Policy.

The Federal Aviation Commission recommends the transfer of all power over air-mail subsidies, now vested in the Postoffice Department, to an air commerce division—with control temporarily vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

To those who are anxious to rescue the air lines from impending bankruptcy, any proposal that would divest Postmaster General Farley of the authority which he has exercised with such devastating effect, will be welcome. The President himself approves the findings of the commission in general. And by admitting the emergency character of the situation, he tacitly acknowledges the intolerable condition created by bungling and ignorant interference with air-mail services.

In one important respect, however, the President withholds approval of the Aviation Commission's report. He unequivocally opposes the suggested establishment of an independent air commerce commission, believing it is unwise to multiply the number of separate regulatory agencies in the field of transportation. His position is undoubtedly well taken.

Experience has shown on many occasions that Government agencies, however closely allied their work and their aims may be, seldom show great willingness to cooperate with one another to further the attainment of larger objectives. Indeed innumerable instances of inexcusable working at cross purposes have come to light in connection with the operations of the newly established emergency regulatory agencies of the Government. To encourage this tendency in the transportation problem, where unification is now the first essential, would be most unfortunate.

It is, as the President states, a dangerous matter to multiply regulatory agencies when their duties are essentially complementary and sometimes overlapping. Regulation of aviation should be entrusted to the I. C. C. so that the industry may be developed as an integral part of the transportation system of the United States. That system would today be much more highly integrated, and the problems confronting the railways would be less serious, if the importance of unified control over competing transportation agencies had been recognized at an earlier date.

It would be a great mistake to exclude the air lines from any such coordinated program, leaving their control to an independent body that, even if technically competent, might by its very zeal do great and unwitting damage to existing transportation agencies. The I. C. C. has had long and valuable experience as a regulatory agency, and there is no reason why it should not be reorganized and expanded to cover not only railroads but other transport lines, including aviation. It would only be necessary to enlist the services of men who are familiar with the special problems that concern aviation.

With their advice and collaboration, the general transportation situation could be viewed as a whole by experts trained to weigh the merits of competing agencies and to subordinate the good of the parts to the welfare of the whole.

The Far Eastern Drama.

Commissar Tukhachevsky's announcement that the Soviet army has attained a strength of 940,000 men further dramatizes the epic clash of policies which is being enacted in the Far East. Having strengthened and redistributed her armed forces and built new frontier fortifications, the Soviet openly accuses Japan of violating the Treaty of Portsmouth. These developments are as obviously a warning to Japan as if they had been incorporated in a formal note to Tokyo.

Coincidentally the Japanese troops in Manchukuo are pushing into the disputed territory where Outer-Mongolia adjoins the Soviet. Officials in Tokyo admit that frontier clashes in districts, where the Manchurian border is not clearly defined, "may cause serious trouble at any time." Yet the Japanese forces continue to advance.

At Nanking another scene of the three-cornered drama goes forward. The Japanese are trying to induce President Chiang Kai-Shek to accept the hegemony of Tokyo instead of relying upon the effort of the League of Nations to forward Chinese reconstruction. The extent of these negotiations is impossible to determine. But the aim of the Japanese does not seem open to question. They are determined to go forward with their policy of domination and are offering China concessions for her acquiescence.

Between these two tremendous forces China, weak, disunited and impoverished, appears in the role of an unwilling pawn. Chiang has been unable to rid his country of Communist armies. Japan offers him help in this undertaking. But the Chinese are bitterly suspicious of Japan, and to many of them Soviet imperialism offers more hope than the Japanese variety. More and more the tendency is toward division within China while the opposing forces gather strength.

Japan's careful restraint during the naval conversations has now been abandoned. Her feeling of security from external interference will, of course, be substantially accentuated by the Senate's recent isolationist vote. When her determined policy is matched against the Soviet's challenge to "try our borders," the outlook can not be called peaceful.

"America Must Choose."

Three members of the Cabinet have emphasized before the Senate Agriculture Committee this week the desirability of increasing our foreign trade. Their testimony inevitably raises the question of whether the Administration is once more looking toward international commerce as the logical road to recovery. Certainly Secretaries Hull, Wallace and Roper are thinking along that line.

Secretary Hull bitterly denounced "blind nationalistic measures which are getting us nowhere." With something of the idealistic enthusiasm that used to characterize his speeches as a Senator, he inveighed against that selfish leadership which results in "depression and despair." "We can see signs of light breaking here and there," he is quoted as saying, "but most nations which are highly in favor of our program are not sure of our sincerity and intentions."

While the Secretary's remarks seem to have been intended as a lecture to the world in general, they recoil with especially profound effect upon the Administration of which he is a part. Why are other governments skeptical of "our sincerity and intentions"? No doubt this remark was aimed at the Senate's vote on the World Court, but it also pointedly recalls the incomprehensible policy followed by the Administration at the World Economic Conference. In view of their experience at that gathering, it is not surprising that other governments remain apathetic when an American official suggests a new economic conference.

As Cabinet members point out the desirability of stimulating foreign trade the Administration proceeds with policies which make that objective more difficult of attainment. Production costs have been increased under the NRA. Agricultural prices have been advanced through the AAA. These may be desirable undertakings. But are they compatible with a program of expanding world trade which brings American goods into keener competition with those of other countries where production costs are lower? In which of two opposite directions does the Administration intend to seek recovery?

There is a great deal of truth in Secretary Hull's contention that "one nation alone can not restore international trade." If world commerce is to be revived, concessions must be mutual. But what contribution is the New Deal making toward the development of machinery that would make such adjustments possible? Actually the trend is away from cooperation with the League of Nations and other agencies that seek to focus world-wide efforts to bring about recovery.

Open-Street Slums.

Demolition of alley dwellings, now happily under way, will not completely rid Washington of blighted residential areas. In fact, some of the shacks on open streets are more unsightly and insanitary than some of the alley dwellings which Congress has condemned. And efforts of local authorities to cope with this situation have been futile.

In these circumstances the importance of the bills which Senator King engineered through the Senate on Wednesday can be readily appreciated. At present local authorities may condemn a building unsafe or unfit for human habitation. But if such a house is demolished or repaired, the District can be compelled to pay for it. Under the bills approved by the Senate such expenses would have to be borne by the property owner, and the repair of hovels having little value would not be permitted.

Enactment of these measures is an essential corollary to the slum clearance program. If they should fail, the work of the Alley Dwelling Authority might result in the substitution of wretched living quarters on open streets for those now hidden in alleys. Before the inhabited alleys can be converted to other use suitable housing must be found for several thousand persons. It would be a travesty indeed to move these families out of their present quarters into buildings that may be even worse.

Out Of Keeping.

No doubt the ladies were only trying to be polite, but the fact is that they laughed when Dr. Thomas H. Healy, chairman of the national defense committee of the American Legion, announced at a national defense conference here that "the idea of a universal and perpetual peace is, of course, a most stirring idea."

The reason that many "supposedly intelligent people" work strenuously for disarmament, Dr. Healy further explained, is that they believe they can accomplish "with their super-super-colossal brains what God hasn't been able to do in all these centuries of our history."

There are not many mortals who can speak with such complete assurance on the limitations of the Deity. When one graces a local platform it seems a little out of key to laugh at his remarks. Surely an attitude of sober reverence would have been a more becoming tribute to Dr. Healy's unusual contacts.

The average American family now pays about $2 a day for Government. We're beginning to wonder if it's worth that much to maintain an agency to blame everything on.

TVA Competition.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In administering the TVA in opposition to private companies (one of which I put my money in as an investment and received no dividends), I find:

(1) Muscle Shoals cost the taxpayers $60,000,000 to construct but TVA carries it for rate-making purposes at $25,000,000; (2) maximum tax paid by TVA is 5 per cent on wholesale price of electricity in comparison to private companies paying 15 per cent and 20 per cent on retail price, or four times as high; (3) TVA freight rates are only two-thirds of what individuals and private corporations pay; (4) franked mail paid for by the Government is used to mail bills to TVA consumers and carry on correspondence with them and the TVA uses the frank also for advertising and propaganda purposes.

With competition of such character it looks to me as though my dividend expectations are very much in the distance, despite the fact that I am one of the little fellows who need the money.

Traffic Proposal.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: No one subject confronting the Nation is of more vital importance than the reduction of traffic accidents. The traffic deaths of more than 5,000 children in a 1934 death roll of more than 36,000 people should rouse apathetic indifference to indignation and create a demand for Federal investigation of the methods being used in attempting to control traffic and reduce the resultant accidents. The fatal casualties of more than 250,000 with an injury list of more than 6,000,000, during the past decade of attempted control is an indictment of the methods used that should not go unchallenged.

If such a preventable loss should occur in war the Chief Executive and Congress would not hesitate to investigate and take such action as was necessary to prevent a recurrence; nevertheless statistics show and the Nation's publications decry daily the fact that the menace of street and highway accidents is worse than war! Analyses and statistics further show that 85 per cent of accidents are due to human behaviour, with an overwhelming responsibility resting upon the driver of the car.

Investigation shows that all effective safety movements have been achieved by the observance of and strict adherence to safety rules. Why so many precedents of safety achievements have not been applied to reduce the national tragedy of street and highway accidents is unexplainable and inexcusable.

There are many motorists who drive with care and safety, though they habitually take chances, because they have not been enjoined with specific rules. Then there is the great legion who do not know how to drive safely in traffic because they have never received any instruction through safety rules in operating a car. Approximately 95 per cent of the drivers are responsible and would drive safely if safety rules were explained with positive injunctions that a violation of those rules would deprive them temporarily or permanently of their driving privilege.

Simple graphic safety rules enjoined upon all drivers would obtain automatic traffic control; with a positive rule therein stating: "A failure to report an infringement of these rules would be a violation of them." A report of rules violated would not subject the violator, nor the one who reports to court action (the very thing that today withholds reports of improper driving). Three violations of safety rules should deprive the violator of driving privilege, in accordance with the offense and the rule governing the penalty.

More than 20,000,000 motorists want safety on the highway and will cooperate to obtain it. Safety rules enjoined upon them as a measure of education will reduce accidents as they have in every other case where such safety rules are emphasized.

Credit To Coughlin.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The defeat of the World Court protocol marks a distinct epoch in the history of this Nation, for it signifies that America's sovereignty remains stolidly unimpaired and free from European domination and dictatorship, and that the wise counsel of Washington and Jefferson, who warned of the snares of European entanglements, has not gone unheeded. To Father Coughlin lasting credit is due for marshaling public opinion at the very brink of disaster to take decisive steps to prevent our falling into the pitfall so cleverly prepared for us, and which so nearly came to pass.

A news item commenting on Europe's reaction stated: "The result should be a lesson to Europe to discontinue offering special privileges to the United States as the price of American participation in international organisms." How ridiculous! Since when has Europe accorded us any special privileges? Were we enriched in any way for saving Europe from Hohenzollern rule? Had it not been for the United States where would Europe be today? And has Europe forgotten so readily the fact that she still owes us $12,000,000,000, which she has no intention of paying.

The World Court or its affiliate, the League of Nations, is powerless to prevent wars so long as selfishness and distrust rule nations and men. Witness today the growth in armaments, the fighting in the Orient and the Chaco, and the revival of the balance of power in Europe, all at a time when the league is supposed to be the great instrumentality for peace. League advocates must not close their eyes to realities. LELAND F. JAMES.

Townsend Shouts And Murmurs.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Hurrah for the Townsend plan! It is the greatest thing that has been suggested. I am for it because I am past 60 years of age, and so is my wife, and we would draw $400 per month. They say we will have to spend all of it each month. We are plain people and do not care for finery and foolishness, and are past the age when we want to have parties or travel. We are content to stay at home and have a comfortable chair in the chimney corner.

We live in a small town and own our little home, so have no rent to pay. We can buy pork and beef, and bacon and hams and lard, and chickens and eggs, milk and butter and fruits and vegetables at very reasonable prices from our neighbors who are engaged in farming. We can buy more food for $40 than we can possibly eat in one month. But we have three sons and four daughters, all of whom are married. We can supply them with all the groceries they need, and still have $80 per month left to spend for other things.

Where is the money to come from? That is none of my lookout. It is up to Congress to furnish the money, and it had better do so if it passes the bill. I suppose Congress has the money in its pocket or knows where it can get it. Again, I say hurray for the Townsend plan.

RAGGED EDGE.
Washington, Jan. 28.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am urged by Mr. Elliott Thurston's recent article in your very interesting and valuable paper to give him a simple answer in favor of the Townsend plan.

A sales tax of two or three per cent would more than finance the plan and the pensioners could pay the tax. The United States Treasury would be the national bank, and all the banks in the country would be branch banks. B. F. ADAMS.
Silver Spring, Md., Jan. 27.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The "Sinclair," "Long" and "Townsend" plans to eliminate poverty are indirectly attributable to the Administration's unsound fiscal policy. Dangerous forces have been released which are beginning to assume serious proportions; whether or not they can be controlled remains to be seen.

The hope that "something" can be obtained from "nothing" is older than the pyramids; a brain must be as solid as a pyramid to entertain many of these delusive schemes.

If the Townsend plan, for example, is actually feasible, as some maintain, why limit the amount to $200 per month? Why not $1,000? And why not set in motion more and more "revolving" plans, not only to aid the aged but the helpless, poor and infirm everywhere? Indeed, why not start the "printing press" and eliminate poverty overnight by distributing billions to everyone?

We are told that billions in "baby" bonds will soon be offered to the public. Many of us fail to enthuse over the idea, as for all we may know to the contrary, the dollar may be decapitated again in the future. Moreover, the fact that the United States of America is not earning its "fixed charges" creates much uneasiness in the minds of conservative investors. E. K. G.

Indian Maid.

Post Office, Saturday.

HOW has Pocahontas escaped the debunker?

You can't cross the Potomac without some reference to that "fair Indian" assaulting the eye and recalling the pretty story which the school-history told of Powhatan's daughter—of her husband, John Rolfe—and of John Smith, too. It is a story that ought to lure every debunking soul. It has all the qualities that the hard-boiled love to disqualify. It——

Well, we haven't any sympathy with debunking, but even in our unsophisticated youth there did seem to be discrepancies in the accepted narrative. Nor have these been lessened by reference to the old authorities.

Smith's own books are really good books which too few people prefer to "Anthony Adverse." But their bold author reveals a certain hesitancy about Pocahontas.

It began on one of his expeditions into the forest. "Being arrived at Werowocomico," he and his companions were "received in great state by "The Powhatan." There were "good words and great platters of sundry victuals." There was a four- or five-day visit.

Yet Smith must have done something to annoy his host. We find him suddenly dragged to The Powhatan's feet, and it is to be remarked that bashing out the brains of a prisoner was not the usual form of capital punishment in those districts, either!

The traditional version, as set down by Katherine Pearson Woods, noted that "it was the unquestioned privilege of the Indian women, upon whom rested the domestic economy of a village, to choose from prisoners any whom they wished to adopt as husbands, sons or brothers. This adoption was never disputed by the warriors," no matter how bitter the hatred "they may have cherished beforehand." And Miss Woods dismissed the subsequent Pocahontas drama by saying that "such a right was now exercised by Matocaca, or Pocahontas."

Yet what sort of adoption?

Pocahontas was then under 13, less than half Smith's years. She couldn't have wanted him for a son. Her early references to him as "father" would be accepted by a debunker as having about the significance that attaches to the modern use of the term "Sugar Daddy." Smith's fellow-soldiers, Pots and Phettiplac, assure us that he "considered her simply as a child." But the fact remains that 13 was an age whereat the young ladies of Werowocomico began to think about romance. Moreover, the well-named and evidently aspirate-dropping Master Ralph Hamor—also of Jamestown and the source of the story—says she frequently visited the settlement after Smith's return to it.

And then Master Hamor has the impudence to expect us to believe Pocahontas was "bought" from her father—at the price of "a copper kettle"—and that her marriage with John Rolfe was a love match, the pair having been sweet on each other "long before!"

Whatever the truth of the Smith episode, Hamor's view of the Rolfe wedding exacts a good deal from human credulity. Rolfe arrived at the settlement during Dale's administration; he had certainly never set eyes on the girl before her "purchase." He had buried a wife and child since coming to Virginia; after the death of Pocahontas, he married a third time.

It is admitted that Dale approved the Rolfe-Pocahontas union. He probably arranged it, for diplomatic reasons. What's more, it is of record that the bride was told that "Capt. Smith was dead."

Years later she saw Smith himself, again. It was while she was a homesick exile, probably in the early stages of the tubercular disease which was to kill her. Smith was about to sail for New England; he heard that she was at Brentford, in Devonshire, and went to see her. He writes:

"After a modest salutation, without a word, she turned about, obscured her face, not seeming well contented, and in that humor her husband, with divers others, we all left her 2 or 3 hours . . .

"But not long afterward, she began to talk, saying:

"'You did promise Powhatan what was yours should be his, and he the like unto you; you called him father, being in his land a stranger, and by the same reason so must I do you.'"

"Were you not afraid to come into my father's country, and caused fear in him and all his people, but me; and fear you here that I should call you father? I tell you then I will, and you shall call me child, and so I will be forever and ever your countryman. They did tell us always you were dead, and I knew no other till I came to Plymouth.'"

When he set down that simple and tender passage, was the gallant Captain an artist or a chronicler? If an artist, he was a master of innuendo. If a chronicler, he set truth above reserve. In short, he was either an adept of the kiss-and-tell school, or else an adept of the even less savory and more populous school of those who miss the kiss and take the credit anyhow.

Britain Fears Little From American Films

Much-Discussed Threat Of "Americanization" Fails To Affect Cinema Fans.

By Edward Acheson.
(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

London.

ALARUMS pass. As recently as two years ago the "Americanization of England," by means of the films, was a prospect sufficiently terrible to make strong Britons tremble. Today, the subject is never mentioned. And more American films were shown in 1934 than ever before.

There must be a number of reasons for this change of attitude: three are immediately apparent. In the first place it has now been definitely proven that nothing short of an act of God can change, alter or eradicate a cockney accent. This has been obviously and unfortunately, proven by a number of England's great public figures. And what is true of cockney is, to a large extent, true of the other "dialects," including the so-called Oxford accent. As teachers of languages persist in pointing out, it is by talking with, not listening to other people, that peculiarities of speech are acquired.

Eighteen and a half million Britons go weekly to the cinema, and the keenest ear has not yet been able to detect any American corruption in the purity of the Cheapside or Yorkshire tongues. Expressions, on the other hand, do creep in, but somehow they become nationalized in the creeping. It would simply be cavilling to criticize the "Americanization" of the cab driver who said of his lady-love, "Gor blimmie, if she hain't an 'ot shot." English as a spoken language seems to be safe.

And again, the spiritual Americanization of the population hasn't lived up to the fears that were felt for it. Gangsters haven't leapt out of Surrey nor has there been a notable increase in the number of servant girls who marry their employer's son as a reward for chastity. Even women's clothes have been slow to change, although there is a great potential demand in that quarter, which the stores, to date, have not exploited to the full.

• • • •

IN THE final analysis, it must, I think, be admitted that this aspect of the danger was pretty obviously a mare's-nest. A people don't become "Russianized" by going to the ballet, nor "Italianized" by the opera. Interested in the spectacle itself, perhaps interested in the other country, but not influenced, not "ized" into altering national habits. A change in the day-to-day life of a country is only imminent when an alternative is presented, which is either more profitable, and, at the same time, available—or easier. "Americanization" offers neither of these features at the moment. And England has calmed her fears.

Perhaps the most efficient silencer on the ancient battle cry was the British pictures themselves. An act of Parliament in 1927 forced the movie houses to show at least 15 per cent British-made films. They did, to the lasting benefit of the Hollywood industry. A demand fixed by law and an industry unequipped to take avantage, resulted in sloppily made comedies, pointless slow historical pieces and indescribable shorts, known as "quickies." Immediately, it became fashionable for Englishmen to "run down" English pictures, to refuse to see them, and to "boost" the American product. The industry still suffers from this unfortunate start, and has been very slow in getting under way even in a protected market.

• • • •

AMONG directors, only Alexander Korda, a Hungarian with Hollywood background, is at the moment promising significant things. Alfred Hitchcock, who produced "The Man Who Knew Too Much," and Victor Saville, of Gaumont, are good, above the average even in America. Korda, on the other hand, is either excellent or terrible. His "Whither Mankind?" which is being produced this year is the most interesting picture scheduled; it will be either a brilliant success or a complete flop. That's one of the nice things about Korda, you don't have to wonder. The other pictures which may have a run in America are "Pickwick Papers," "Peg Woffington," with Anna Neagle, and perhaps "Drake." Elizabeth Bergner in "Escape Me Never" is an even money bet for the export trade, but, outside those mentioned, the year's crop is not highly ambitious.

For the time being, the British companies seem content to cater to their 15 per cent protected trade by using stage and music hall stars on the screen. They have developed no exclusively screen actors, no screen technique in acting. They have an assured market for almost anything they produce, and are not very interested in the rest.

The extent to which British films are not exported can be gathered from the relative unfamiliarity of the names of the English movie stars. Gracie Fields, of Music Hall fame, in England takes all laurels for popularity, both foreign and domestic: in America she's not even an also-ran. Madelaine Carol and Elisabeth Bergner may be known west of New York to some extent, but the other sure-fire names in England are quite unsung in that hinterland—Leslie Fuller, so low a comedian that the adjective gives too great an impression of altitude—and Tom Walls, Ralph Lynn and Stanley Lupino, all completely home-grown.

• • • •

IN dealing with imported goods, England doesn't just take them in job lots: the country has very decided opinions, sometimes coinciding with the American public's, sometimes quite divergent. The Garbo, Shearer and Mae West are the female headliners as far as box office goes, the last named being liked in spite of the nation's better judgment.

Or, perhaps, the lady is misunderstood: in the Eastern Daily Press recently appeared an advertisement, "Refined young lady wanted immediately to impersonate Mae West to advertise her new picture." Eddie Cantor, Beery, Robert Montgomery, Arliss and Chevalier "pack 'em in," although Arliss' "Iron Duke" and Chevalier's "Merry Widow" are hailed by many as a duet in swan songs. Katherine Hepburn doesn't appeal for tuppence in the pound. Will Rogers is absolutely "no go"—too definitely American, you know. Oddly enough Durante gets by fairly well. And Edward Everett Horton is considered very British in his humor and vastly appreciated.

The most universally acclaimed American actors fall into a special class. Mickey Mouse and the Silly Symphonies have England down for the count: the country loves them to a man. And if their inclusion on every program isn't sufficient proof, then there's the current 100 per cent Disney program at the Tatler New Theater playing to packed houses.

• • • •

IN passing it might be well to note that although American films are supject to import duty, the majority of American distributors pay no income tax in Britain. And this, for the very good reason that they plod along in "perennial bankruptcy." A film is shipped over, is booked, and the estimated gross is wired to New York. Whereupon the New York office charges the London branch for the film at exactly that figure. If the guessing has been good the London distributor stays consistently broke and has no income to tax.

On the other hand the most interesting British film of the last year will probably have no gross to worry about because it is having grave difficulties in getting itself shown. "Forgotten Men" is a collection of authentic "shots" of the war, taken by British and German cameramen in action. In comparison, written descriptions of war are wholly ineffective. This picture covers its subject so completely that there is nothing further to be said until we produce another war more horrible than the last. Only a few feet from the camera, thousands of men are blown to atoms, bayoneted, left writhing in agony on the ground. Men are drowned, hundreds of men, so close that the audience can almost reach out to help. Death in the sea, in the snows of the Alps, in Flanders, in the air, death everywhere and in every conceivable manner, and some, fortunately, inconceivable. But the cumulative effect is not only one of horror—not horror primarily—but of frustration, the prodigeous extent, the duration, the utter aimlessness of all this destruction. Any league for peace which is more interested in its aims than in its organization has only to hire theaters and show this film. The resultant mass-production of converts would leave Billy Sunday in the class of hand craftsmen.

"Forgotten Men" is wholly British in conception and execution; it's a very important document. But it is showing at only one small theater in London—not very well patronized. The mass of the people, it seems, prefers to spend its money on the Hollywood product, defy the foul fiend and take its chances on the "inevitable Americanization."

Claim Of Client Denied in Action Against Brokers

A dispute between Fenner & Beane, stockbrokers, and Arthur Donovan, a customer, as to whether he was liable for losses sustained through purchases of wheat, cotton, silver and securities in July, 1933, was decided in favor of the brokers by a jury in District Supreme Court yesterday.

Donovan, through Attorney J. C. Dutton, claimed the manager of the local branch had used his own judgment in making the purchases, without any authority from him.

The brokerage firm contended that all the transactions were authorized by Donovan, who continued to purchase securities from it even after his account had been closed showing the disputed losses. The customer claimed losses of $5,883.

Curtis B. Dall, a former son-in-law of President Roosevelt, and 23 other partners were named defendants. They were represented by the law firm of Whiteford, Marshall & Hart. The trial was held before Chief Justice A. A. Wheat.

The Spring Signs.

BUSINESS men looking around for reassurances from Mr. Roosevelt should be able to get plenty of comfort from his evident determination not to fumble the spring upturn this year. It was fumbled last year and there are forces working now to fumble it again, but the important thing is that they are getting no encouragement from the President.

BARGERON.

The renewal of the automobile code is a notable example. If it had not been for him the stage was all set, it seemed, for months of wrangling, of agitation and maybe a strike, and right at the time of the industry's spring boom.

Even now Mr. William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, is trying to kick up a row in the industry. His attitude is inexplicable, just as it has been at many other stages of the recovery movement. He has a negligible membership in the automobile industry and a ballot just conducted under the auspices of an impartial board reveals quite clearly that no material number of the automobile employes want to affiliate with him.

Notwithstanding this, he insists that the code should not have been renewed; that it should have been revised to call for a 40-hour week. He would much prefer, apparently, to spend the next few months in fighting, in preventing the full employment effect of the spring boom.

And with him stood a majority of the members of the National Recovery Board. They voted three to two against a renewal of the code. Mr. Donald Richberg was against it. In a statement some time ago he said it was most unfortunate that the impression had gone out the code would be extended. He has a very peculiar philosophy, Mr. Richberg has.

Mr. Roosevelt stepped in, of course, and extended the code. At the same time he negotiated another gain for the employes—time-and-a-half pay for overtime.

• • • •

It was not this way last spring. The automobile industry was threatened with a strike, the steel industry, the textile industry. The whole labor picture was such, in fact, as to discourage the hardiest of the recovery promoters. As a result the spring opportunity was thrown utterly away.

The impression seemed inescapable at that time that Mr. Roosevelt was encouraging the malcontents. The delightful Harry Hopkins gave such encouragement as to promise to feed strikers along with the regular unemployed.

• • • •

Of course, there are signs of unrest this year, leading to the conviction that some of the labor leaders at least, are more concerned in getting members for their organization than in the return of men to work. Mr. McMahon, of the textile workers, is again getting ants in his pants. He feels the urge for another strike.

And Mr. Green is determined to upset things if he can by having Congress pass a 30-hour week.

There will probably be strikes. The spring will probably be studded with them. But it seems they will be without the encouragement of Mr. Roosevelt this time.

• • • •

Maybe he is coming to the mind of Woodrow Wilson. The war President sympathized with organized labor. He got it one gain after another. It came coming back for more. Finally he got pretty disgusted.

Labor has made notable strides under Mr. Roosevelt. But it shouldn't try to press the ball too hard. If it conducts itself the coming year as it did last it is likely to find that it has lost far more than it has won.

8th Transfusion Gives Child Chance to Live

After his eighth blood transfusion, Ronald MacQueen, 2½-year-old son of Mrs. Lillian MacQueen, was given a chance to recover by physicians at Children's Hospital last night.

The child, suffering from tuberculosis, has been a patient there since last April. His condition became critical early Thursday, and an appeal by his mother for donors of blood brought 200 volunteers. Harold Donovan, a District fireman, yesterday was the last to have his blood transferred to the stricken child.

"The Blizzard of 1935."

(As it will probably be described by a New Yorker 20 years from now.)

"Yes sir, that was the worst ever! At Lexington avenue and Forty-second street, where the old Chrysler building stood at that time, the gales had piled the snow up to the thirty-second story. Scores of people marooned in the skyscraper finally got out by sliding down on sleds.

• • • •

"There was a big office building at Fifth avenue and Thirty-fourth in those days known as the Empire State Building, and the terrific gale at that point piled the snow up to such height that only the observation tower was visible. A friend of mine had gone to the tower during the storm and they got him out six weeks later by dog team.

• • • •

"Remember the old Pennsylvania Railroad Station? Well, at the height of the storm it was swept away up to 116th street and Broadway, and by a curious coincidence Nicholas Murray Butler was caught in a back-draft and swept down to the site of the Pennsylvania Station.

• • • •

"It caused quite a mixup. For weeks travelers kept insisting that Dr. Butler was the Pennsylvania Station and demanding railroad and Pullman tickets. And Columbia University sent the station abroad for a Sabbatical year. It was frightful. We don't get storms like that any more.

• • • •

"It was about 20 below zero and the wind blew close to 100 miles an hour for two days. There was a Mayor named LaGuardia at that time. His arms and hands got so numb he couldn't gesticulate so we knew it was mighty cold. The Mayor was beginning a speech on taxes when the storm first broke, and the wind was so fierce it blew him into a mothers' club address three months away.

• • • •

"Tammany Hall was buried in ice for more than two weeks, but it had been so cold there ever since Jimmy Walker's regime that nobody noticed the difference.

• • • •

"I was a radio announcer at that time for a tropical tours program and the storm was so blinding I wound up with the Admiral Byrd broadcast. It took me 72 hours to make the distance from what was then Times Square to what is now Alexander Woollcott, and I had the wind behind me.

• • • •

"I almost forgot to mention one thing. It'll give you a vivid idea of the severity of that blizzard of '35. Remember those streamline trains they were experimenting with in those days? Well, one of those trains doing 100 miles an hour ran into a wind blowing 150 miles an hour. It stopped the train dead in its tracks, blew it inside out and scattered the passengers as far west as Omaha. Boy, they had blizzards in those days!"

Further proof that we live in a cockeyed world is afforded by the spectacle of these grilling examinations of ordinary sailormen after every shipwreck when the real responsibility possibly lies with our legislators at Washington. All the recommendations made after the Vestris tragedy were sidetracked by the national lawmakers. And if you can find a Senator who has bothered to read the recommendations by the International Convention for Safety at Sea you're a wonder, Gunga Din.

Woodchuck And Candles

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

CANDLEMAS DAY, Festum Candelarum Sive Luminum, has for many years been celebrated on the 2d of February. It celebrates the bringing of the infant Jesus to the temple. The Blessed Virgin went through at that time the required purification. Of all the feasts in honor of Mary, this is the oldest. About 375 A. D. it was held on February 14, and the Armenians still adhere to that date, celebrating the coming of the Lord into the temple.

Before long it was changed to February 2, 40 days after Christmas, as February 14 was 40 days after Epiphany or Three Kings, which comes January 5. The Emperor Justinian made it a universal feast in the year 542.

• • • •

In medieval times, during the eleventh century, the custom of blessing the candles for the entire following year became quite general; thus the name Candlemas.

The second of February is an illustration of the sublime and the ridiculous, for it is both Candlemas and ground-hog day. The ground hog is not the hedgehog or porcupine, but our familiar furry friend, the woodchuck. Why was February 2 chosen for his day? The superstition is, of course, that on this day he emerges from his hole, where he has been in winter quarters, looks around and, if the sun is shining so clearly that he can see his shadow, he will then return to his subterranean home and winter will last another six weeks. But if it is cloudy, it means winter will soon be over. There is as much truth in this as in most superstitions—absolutely none at all. But it is rather a jolly superstition, don't you think? And it comes to the relief of the newspapers in dull seasons, giving them a chance for an editorial and a picture of the animal.

• • • •

When I was 17 years old, I shot a woodchuck and ate the hindquarters after I had cooked them for a long, long spell. I could not possibly eat any part of the animal now. What a difference there is between things that are edible and things that are eatable!

When Theodore Roosevelt was President, an editor of a Southern newspaper made one of the wittiest remarks on ground-hog day I have ever read, but as it might hurt the feelings of some millions of people, I will not repeat it.

School Body Asks Fund Left in Will

Unclaimed Bequest Starts Westminster Battle.

Westminster, Md., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—The right of the Board of Education of Carroll County to claim $500 bequeathed in the will of William T. Bowers, of near Winfield, to Walter Pritchard, of the same community, who died before the terms of the will could be executed, was the subject of a hearing before the Orphans' Court here.

The school board claimed the $500 bequest under the terms of a Maryland statute which provides that where money is bequeathed to a person who dies before the terms of the will can be carried out, and leaves no relatives or dependents, the bequest reverts to the Board of Education. Pritchard, reported to have been an adopted son of Bowers, had no known relatives.

The Orphans' Court judges held that they had no jurisdiction in disposing of the $500, which is being held in the Farmers and Mechanics National Bank of Westminster, subject to the future order of the Orphans' Court. Whether the Board of Education will enter suit for the collection of the money has not been decided, according to Charles O. Clemson, attorney for the school board.

Seibert Heads Relief In Berkeley County

The six-member board supplants as an agency for handling Federal and state relief funds the former larger Berkeley County Welfare Board which was returned by the change order to its "statute" status, largely of an advisory nature.

Brazilian Cotton Cut Declared Impractical

Export Estimates Balance 1935 Imports And Debts Under Present Conditions.

By Augusto Amaral.

In the following article Sr. Amaral, a distinguished Brazilian economist, examines the possibility of an increase in American imports to his country. The analysis is particularly timely because of the pending reciprocal tariff treaty with Brazil scheduled for signing within the next few days.

THE Bank of Brazil gave out on January 2 a statement to the effect that it did not have exchange available to pay coupons due January 1. Two days later, the press was notified that remittances of funds to meet those coupons had been made, the bank adding that it had been compelled to transfer for that purpose exchange which had been earmarked to pay imports.

Holders of Brazilian bonds may conclude from the statement given by the bank to the press that Brazil is on the verge of defaulting again in the payment of interest on its foreign debt. A Brazilian delegation is now in Washington and, after visiting New York, proposes to proceed to London and Paris. Whether it has in mind negotiating easier terms of payment of bond interest, or seeking a modification of the Brazilian Government's edict of February 5, 1934, can not be said. This edict establishes a plan for part payment of interest on Brazilian Federal, State and municipal foreign bonds and full interest on the Federal Government funding loans. No provision is made under the plan for payment of sinking funds on any of the above loans.

Brazil defaulted payment on its Federal bonds in the early part of 1931, and interest due from October, 1931 to October 1934 was funded into a new loan bearing interest at 5 per cent. Brazilian states and municipalities defaulted in the payment of interest and sinking funds on their loans from 1931 up to March, 1934, when part payments on their bonds were resumed under the terms of the said edict of February 5, 1934.

• • • •

FROM 1930 to 1934 Brazil's import and export trade was as follows, computed in thousands of pounds sterling:

| | Exports. | Imports. | Favorable bal. of trade. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1930..... | £65,746 | £53,619 | £12,127 |
| 1931..... | 60,544 | 39,756 | 20,788 |
| 1932..... | 30,629 | 21,744 | 14,885 |
| 1933..... | 35,790 | 28,131 | 7,659 |
| 1934..... | *34,034 | *34,370 | *9,664 |

*Approximate.

It will readily be seen that, with the exception ,perhaps, of 1931, at no time during the above five-year period was Brazil able to provide from its favorable balance of trade, the funds required to meet full interest and sinking fund charges on its total foreign debt, which require an annuity of £20,716,996. As a matter of fact, during the above period, Brazil paid the full interest on its funding loans, redeemed a short-term loan of £6,500,000 contracted with Messrs. N. M. Rothschild in 1930, and resumed in April, 1934, payment of interests on its foreign bonds, under the terms of the edict of the fifth of February, 1934.

It is possible that Brazil may not have this month, nor in February, March, or perhaps April next, sufficient exchange available for payment of interest due these months, after exchange to pay bills for imports is provided. This would be due to the fact that present slack exports of coffee may not supply the necessary exchange to meet the above payments, and cotton from the State of Sao Paulo will not be ready for export until April.

It must be mentioned here that during the past two years exchange has, however, been provided, whether by the Bank of Brazil or other banks in the country, for the repatriation of a considerable number of Rio Grande do Sul, Minas Geraes, Sao Paulo, Parana and Pernambuco State bonds, and for bonds of the cities of Rio de Janiero and Sao Paulo.

• • • •

BRAZILIAN export trade prospects for 1935 are not as a matter of fact by any means discouraging and should, therefore, not justify any fear of further Brazilian default, at least on the face of the facts and figures submitted below. They have been compiled very carefully and in each case give a very conservative, in fact, low, estimate of what Brazil should earn in 1935, from the export of its commodities. It is quite possible, however, that these compilations may be upset by certain conditions of the American-Brazilian Trade Treaty not yet divulged.

Rumors have been current here and publicity given to them in London papers to the effect that the Government of the United States, during the recent trade treaty discussions, had proposed the curtailment of the production of Brazilian cotton. Brazil, of course, could never entertain any such proposal, and it is very difficult for the writer to conceive just what the Government of the United States could offer to Brazil in reciprocity for that concession.

Brazil's coffee trade is trending downward, at least as far as its shipments to the United States are concerned. Its past policies of valorizing coffee and borrowing heavily for that purpose have compelled Brazil to levy exhorbitant export taxes on that commodity, with the foreseen and inevitable result that other countries were encouraged to increase their production and from year to year become formidable competitors of Brazil in both price and quality.

• • • •

COTTON, on the other hand, the production and export of which have in the past two years increased considerably, appears in the opinion of experts to be the only Brazilian exportable commodity able to save Brazil's position in the international exchange market, and nothing can be given or taken by the Government of the United States to compensate Brazil for the unbalancing of its foreign export trade budget by a demand that it restrict its cotton output.

The following figures give an estimate of income from Brazil's export trade for 1935, from which provision has to be made to pay for imports into the country, for the payment of debt service, under the plan provided by the Government edict, and other exchange requirements.

|---|---|
| Coffee | £27,266,000 |
| Cotton | 11,950,000 |
| Other exports | 8,000,000 |
| | £47,266,000 |

|---|---|
| Imports (average 1930-1934).. | £31,328,000 |
| Debt service, 1935 schedule.. | 7,607,000 |
| Bank of Brazil agreement.... | 1,316,000 |
| Consular service charges..... | 1,250,000 |
| Estimated surplus ..... | 5,664,000 |
| | £47,246,000 |

Unless disturbing elements distort these estimates, Brazil's export trade in 1935 should be sufficient to provide for (a) imports into the country, (b) debt service, (c) other imperative commitments—and leave a surplus of £5,664,000, or $27,527,477, available for payment of interest on loans contracted here and in London by the Paulista and Mogyana railways, as well as on other commitments abroad.

No provision, however, has been made in these estimates for the possible increase in exports from the United States to Brazil, arising out of the trade treaty about to be concluded in Washington. But it must be borne in mind, and American exporters must not lose sight of the fact, that any expansion in their trade must naturally be consistent with present Brazilian credit conditions and the difficulty which has generally been experienced in obtaining reasonably early payment for their shipments to Brazil.

Carmela Ponselle Will Bring Touch of Opera to Earle Stage Late This Month

Noted Mezzo Is Signed for One Exclusive Week

Jack Benny Precedes Her; 'March of Time' Today; Amusement Chat.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Luster is lent a season already notable for the number and distinction of the artists engaged for personal appearances on the stages of our principal motion picture houses by the announcement that Carmela Ponselle, leading mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will appear in person at the Earle Theater late in February.

In revealing this coup, Zone Manager John J. Payette, of the Warner interests, sets the capstone to a mounting list of celebrated stage, screen and radio artists who have paraded across the stage at the Earle—or will have done so within the next few weeks—at no small cost to the house.

Miss Ponselle has been acclaimed by music critics for her opera, concert and radio appearances.

With the Met opolitan, she has won praise in the roles of Laura in Ponchielli's "La Gioconda," Santuzza in "Cavalleria Rusticana," by Mascagni; Amneris in Verdi's "Aida," and many other roles of comparable importance. Her appearance at the Earle will be her exclusive Washington engagement this season.

A Real Bennyfactor.

Jack Benny and Mary Livingston, two of radio's most vibrant personalities, come to the Earle the week of February 15. They will present a comedy interlude of the droll, yet fast-moving, type that the vocally deliberate and inimitable Mr. Benny has popularized on stage, in the cinema and over the air. He is one of the most dependable of contemporary artists, his preeminence as a trusty comic dating as far back as the old B. F. Keith days in Washington, when he used to join the late Nora Bayes in a bit of impromptu clowning after each had finished his "single" act.

A week from today the headliners at the Earle will be Ina Ray Hutton, the dynamic little blonde conductor-dancer, and her Melodears Orchestra, seen and heard not so long ago on another Washington stage, and even more recently shown upon a local screen as the stars of a short subject that met with instant approval as a novel bit of entertainment.

Coupled With Ace Film.

This engagement will be in conjunction with the screen feature, "Devil Dogs of the Air," the first Cosmopolitan Production released by Warners, costarring James Cagney and Pat O'Brien in a legitimate sequel to "Here Comes the Navy."

Miss Hutton features the Frazee Sisters, harmony experts, and Dorothy Crooker, premiere "control" dancer, as the specialists of her act, beside doing a bit of torrid tap dancing on her own account. And car, she pick 'em up and lay 'em down!

But the greatest of these is Ponselle—that is, unless Mr. Benny continues to pile up $35,000 weeks, as he seems to have been doing lately!

When Cornelia Otis Skinner presented "Mansion on the Hudson," her newest monodrama, in the National Theater last Monday night, it was the first public performance of that unusual work. It was necessary, in the circumstances, to know precisely how much time would be required for Miss Skinner's costume changes and the changing of the meager "sets" employed to heighten the atmospheric effect of the six episodes into which this dramatic sequence is divided.

Ever on the alert to be of assistance to artists playing his temple of the arts, Panjandrum Stephen E. Cochran of the National summoned one of his trainer friends from the tracks and "clocked" the changes with a split-second stop-watch. That seemed to some of those concerned drawing the matter a bit fine, but at least, when it was all over, Miss Skinner knew to the fifth of a second how long it had taken her to change her frocks. That, I submit, is service with a vengeance as well as a smile!

A One-Subject Newsreel.

For the first time in its history, the issue of the Paramount Sound News to be shown on local screens for the first time today will be devoted in its entirety to a single topic.

Beginning today at the Metropolitan Theater, the dramatic story of the Flemington, N. J., trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann will be shown in detail on the screen in a special issue of Paramount News.

Hauptmann's actual testimony and his attempts to establish an alibi; the introduction of the famous ladder as evidence; the presentation of the ransom notes and "Jafsie's" dramatic accusation of Hauptmann are only a few of the high lights that have been incorporated in this timely and sensationally interesting release.

Viewing this reel will be approximately equivalent to having been present in the courtroom.

This special issue closes with a withering cross-examination of the defendant by Attorney General David T. Wilentz, of New Jersey, a galling gun succession of rapid-fire questions that bring Hauptmann to his feet in a savage outburst.

You have read it; now it will be possible to see and hear it.

There seems to have been some slight confusion with regard to an announcement made here yesterday regarding Miss Mabel Van Dyke's call for candidates for parts in Betty Souby's new play, "The Field of Honor," to be played for the first time on any stage by the Pierce Hall Players as a test to determine Broadway eligibility.

It seems that the impression was conveyed that the new manuscript play is to be presented in Pierce Hall on February 6 and 7. Such is not the case. Miss Van Dyke's card reads as follows: "The Pierce Hall Players cordially invite you to try out for a part in "The Field of Honor," a new manuscript play by Betty Souby Wednesday and Thursday, February 6 and 7, at 8 p. m." The production of the play will not eventuate until March 28 and 29.

On Wednesday and Thursday evenings of next week, February 6 and 7, the Columbia Players will occupy the stage at Pierce Hall, Fifteenth and Harvard streets, in "The Mask and the Face," a Theater Guild play never before presented in the National Capital.

I trust this will dispel any misapprehension that may have been created by the earlier item.

Will March for Notables.

When the much discussed new screen subject, "The March of Time," is presented for the first time in Washington at Loew's Fox Theater today, it will signalize the assemblage of one of the most notable audiences ever gathered together to view a screen entertainment.

In celebration of this important "premiere," Division Manager Carter Barron and his associate executives in the Loew organization in Washington have invited the leaders of the Capital's social, official and diplomatic circles to be the guests of the management at the last evening performance.

Already a great number of those invited have signified their intention of being present. Among these are the accredited representatives of 16 foreign nations, members of the President's Cabinet, the Senate, House of Representatives and many others of prominence in the life of the Nation's Capital.

"The March of Time" is a new development in the preparation and presentation of events that stand out in the news of the day. It is a creation of the publishers of the magazine Time and requires a total of 20 minutes running time.

This innovation in screen presentations, following its premiere week, will be shown one week each month exclusively at Loew's Fox Theater. It is offered as an added attraction; an extra dividend, over and above the complete regular Fox program.

---

For public information, and to keep the record straight, a late bulletin from the offices of Loew's Washington theaters brings word that news pictures of Bruno Richard Hauptmann being grilled on the stand by Attorney General Wilents during the Flemington trial, also will be shown on the screen at the Palace beginning today. So now you know.

---

"——and Bring the Kiddies."

Tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock in the National Theater the Children's Theater of New York will present "The Prince's Secret," with Mabel Taliaferro the stellar member of the cast.

"The Prince's Secret," an original play by Clare Tree Major, director and founder of the Children's Theater of New York, was written in response to hundreds of requests from members of the Children's Theater audiences—particularly from boys—for a "mystery."

The background of the play is a royal castle in fifteenth century Spain—the days of Ferdinand and Isabella. It reflects in miniature something of the spirit of the age. Although this is a mystery, there is nothing in the play to keep children awake at night, especially because they know the answers to the mysteries long before the people in the play do.

Can You Solve Them?

The major mystery is the disappearance of Prince Ramon from the royal palace, just at the time he should be there to receive his fiancee. Has he gone of his own free will, or has the ambitious chancellor made away with him? How has he managed to escape from his guarded room? And above all, why has he disappeared? Only the princess has the courage and resourcefulness to find the answers to these questions, and her discoveries make a fascinating part of the plot.

The Spanish background, the gypsy dancing and singing, the bright costumes and settings—all enhance the color and gaiety which make the mood of this swift-moving mystery play. "The Prince's Secret" is a great favorite with all audiences—colorful, swift in movement, thrilling, full of gay laughter—replete, in fact, with all the elements which make children love the theater.

With the starting of three new productions this week, the Warner Brothers-First National West Coast studios have set a new record for activity, the number of pictures in work, as the saying goes, totaling ten. New films getting under way this week are "Oil for the Lamps of China," "Dinky" and "The Case of the Curious Bride." Already under way are "Wanderlust," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "Florentine Dagger," "Go Into Your Dance," "King of the Ritz," "Goose and the Gander" and "Traveling Saleslady."

Short Change Note.

"Except when Leap Year gives it 29!".

Prominent on Today's Screens

Watching Them Make Pictures

Hollywood, Jan. 31.

TULLIO CARMINATI sits in the shadow of what is supposed to be the peak of the Eiffel Tower sipping tea. The picture is called "Two On a Tower," and Director Lewis Milestone is arranging the lights and his camera for the set-up. Near Mr. Carminati stands Ida Lupino, the girl he finds when he climbs the highest tower. Ida has just returned from her native England and looks more beautiful than before sailing. Ida is playing the role of a virgin in the flicker; at least in the beginning she is a very good girl. There was much searching for a girl to fill this role in the Carminati-Mary Ellis picture until Milestone selected Lupino.

"It's funny," say Miss Lupino, "me getting such a goody-goody role. Oh, I must tell you. I fell in love, really in love for the first time while I was in London . . . And now I'm to get a chance to prove I'm an actress."

Mary Ellis is not working this day, but she comes on the set to confer with Director Milestone. She and Carminati know each other; they have been rehearsing the songs together. Milestone introduces Miss Ellis to her rival—in the picture—Miss Lupino. Ida is as thrilled as a movie fan to meet her. Milestone talks about the picture to Miss Ellis. He says: "I got you a good looking juvenile today. That's more than you'd do for me." They both smile. Ida Lupino no longer has that heavy English accent. She lost it while on that vacation in London.

THE New York Giants, professional football team, are in town and are being escorted on a sightseeing tour about the Warners' studio. I met up with them in the set of a "Midsummer Night's Dream."

"Hey," says one of the pigskin players to the teammates near him, "these guys use the huddle system. I didn't know they make pictures like we play football."

Down on the field, pardon me, I mean down front near the camera, Director William Dieterle, his assistant, Max Reinhardt, and his interpreter, and Stanley Logan, dialogue director, are in a conference. These five men go into a huddle practically before every take. Then they spread out in the fan-like formation, Quarter Back Dieterle gives the signals, and the players go into action. The players who go into action for this particular sequence are Joe E. Brown, Frank McHugh, Hugh Herbert, Dewey Robinson and James Cagney. These actors seem to be enjoying themselves playing Shakespeare.

It appears that each director selects a special actor and gives instructions to that performer. The Herr professor, that's what they call Max Reinhardt, has selected James Cagney. Herr professor and Jimmy always talk in German. Perhaps this is why Reinhardt selected Cagney. You will be amazed when you see Cagney on the screen as Bottom. The Herr professor, who has staged this play many times, says Cagney gives one of the greatest performances.

Reinhardt is interesting to watch work. He understands enough English, is smart and shrewd, and generally gets his way. Whenever there is a slight argument, the Herr professor gets out by saying: "I don't understand English."

FREDRIC MARCH is to play a scene with Florence Eldridge in "Les Miserables." Miss Eldridge is Mrs. Fredric March, and this is the first time in six years they appear together in a flicker. The last was in "The Studio Mystery Murder." They both played the romantic love leads. Now March is playing the lead and the love interest and Miss Eldridge has come out of the March home to face the camera and portray a madame character in the picture.

Mr. and Mrs. March have several scenes in the picture together. This day they are playing their first. The make-up man takes long and special care with Freddy; but he quickly dabs the make-up on Florence Eldridge, giving no special attention to her. He doesn't recognize her, and he is interested in taking great care of the star. Yet when Florence Eldridge comes on the set as a visitor to watch her husband work, everyone sees to it that she is comfortable. Then she gets plenty of attention.

There aren't any screens placed about "The Wedding Night" set, causing it to look like "Chinatown Nights," for Anna Sten isn't working. Gary Cooper and Helen Vinson are playing a scene for Director King Vidor. Cooper is to be called into Miss Vinson's bedroom. She is lying in bed, having just finished reading a story Gary is supposed to have written. Before the scene is played, Miss Vinson carefully combs her hair again, and new make-up and lipstick are applied to her face. Actresses must appear fresh and beautiful, even if they are going to bed, sleepy, or just getting up in the morning. And you know how we all look getting up in the morning.

Miss Skinner's Latest Program Real Triumph

'Loves of Charles II' Marks Continuance of Star's Favor at National.

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

Because the Nell Gwyn episode is one of the most exquisite and perfect things we have ever seen on any stage, "The Loves of Charles II" has been, is, and will probably continue to be our favorite of all the Cornelia Otis Skinner virtuosa performances.

As Nellie of Old Drury, the fifth of Charles' loves in this sequence, but probably the first in that monarch's heart, she plays with warmth, fire, reality and loveliness, creating a few minutes of the best the theater has to give. And the scene is as rich in its writing as in its playing.

The Charles II series gives Miss Skinner a gallery of all women to paint, in vivid and in shaded colors, and a portrait, too, no less real, because it is never shown in the flesh, of the merry-melancholy Charles himself. A unique and a brilliant talent is this which can not only create so much in and of itself, but even reach out to the empty spaces of the stage, commanding their participation in making many imaginary figures actual.

In addition to the dear, lovable Nellie, Charles' loves are his mother, the tired, bereaved, finished Henrietta Maria, wife of the beheaded Charles I; a bawdy, thick-tongued, brilliantly clad Dutch tavern wench; the violent, titian Lady Castlemaine; the simpering, clever Frenchwoman, Louise de Queroalle; and the tragic, inarticulate Catharine of Braganza, a figure of great dignity.

In the first half of her program last night, Miss Skinner presented a street scene entitled "Times Square," that to us surpassed almost everything of the evening except her Nell Gwyn. In "Hotel Porch," substituted by request for the programmed "Lady Explorer," she gave us a speaking likeness of one of the most vicious old ladies it has ever been our pleasure to meet at a safe distance. The light "Nurse's Day Out," opened the program of an artist who is very important to our theater.

Richmond Mayor Sees Ruin in 'Relief'

Richmond, Va., Feb. 1 (AP).—Asserting that Federal relief plans "as now advanced will wreck us," Mayor J. Fulmer Bright today announced a conference of city officials next week to discuss the matter.

Mayor Bright's principal objection to the New York relief plan was based on a provision calling upon the city to pay the cost of supervision and materials in work projects to be financed with Federal funds.

He said the city, by the closest economy, can provide no more than $250,000 for relief purposes during the next year and that in addition to paying for the materials and supervision out of this, the city would be expected to assume a direct relief load which last year cost $366,000, part of which was supplied by the Federal Government.

4 Years Given Herndon Bank Former Cashier

Asa E. Bradshaw Pleads Guilty to Charges of Embezzlement.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—Asa E. Bradshaw, former cashier of the closed National Bank of Herndon, Va., pleaded guilty to charges of embezzlement and was sentenced to four years in prison by Judge Luther B. Way in Federal Court here today.

Bradshaw was indicted for taking $495 from bank funds March 15, 1932, and $1,000 last August. Authorities said Bradshaw confessed to taking "about $60,000" of bank funds, but specifically he was charged with embezzling $1,000 from the saving account of Arthur J. Lynn on August 3, 1934, and with making false entries "with intent to deceive the comptroller of the currency" on October 1.

Bradshaw, arraigned before U. S. Commissioner John Barton Phillips in Alexandria, and held for action of the grand jury, was taken to Richmond Wednesday and indicted by the grand jury sitting there.

Meanwhile the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is paying off depositors in the bank up to $5,000 under Government insurance. The bank was closed when Federal examiners found a shortage of $70,000 in its accounts.

Approximately 50 slot machines were put out of business. No warrants were served, but places of business where the machines were operated were told to remove them. This was done.

The police acted under the State law, which provides persons using the machines must obtain value of their money put in the slots. It was said value received was not provided for.

Post "Parade of Youth" Scores Hit With Boys and Girls

Harry Adelson, 10, of 1010 I street northwest, left, and Roderick Dawson, who is the same age and lives at 1115 Twelfth street northwest, both enjoyed the first copy of the Parade of Youth, the new section for boys and girls which comes every Sunday in The Washington Post. Harry and Roderick said they both were interested in the stories of aviation and in the review of news around the world, which is a weekly feature.

Herbert Benjamin Wins Train As Dorothy Hoke Leads Girls

Dorothy's Prize Is Electric Kitchen Play Set; Five Express Wagons and Five Shirley Temple Dolls Also Are Awarded in Post Contest.

Hundreds of boys and girls worked hard to see how many words they could make from the letters in "The Parade of Youth"; and the judges worked harder still counting them, to determine the winners in The Post contest which ended Wednesday. After checking and rechecking thoroughly the judges announced the following decisions:

Dorothy Hoke, 11, of 4719 Fourth street northwest, wins first prize for girls, a complete kitchen play set, including an electric range, waffle iron, mangle and other equipment.

Herbert Benjamin, 3616 Rock Creek Church road northwest, wins first prize for boys, an electric train, the latest Zephyr model, complete with tracks and transformer.

The five Shirley Temple dolls, each a perfect replica of the famous movie star, are awarded to the following girls:

Ruth Miller, Marine Barracks, Quantico, Va.

Doris Murphy, 904 Eleventh street northwest.

Anne Babbis, 1209 B street northeast.

Lorraine Hayes, 1522 South Capitol street southeast.

Express wagons, the same type as Post carrier boys use, are awarded to the following boys:

George H. Cain, 2004 Klingle road northwest.

Martin Hoke, 4719 Fourth street northwest.

James S. Koiner, Rockville, Md.

Ralph Bogart, 3770 McKinley street.

Wendall Stephen, Mine Run, Va.

Contestants were asked to see how many words they could make from the letters in "The Parade of Youth," using no letter any more times than it appeared in that phrase. Thus, it was permissible to use the letter "a" twice in a word, but only one "d" could be used. Foreign and obsolete words were barred. Each word list, according to the rules, had to be accompanied by a statement of not more than 25 words on "What I Liked Best in the Parade of Youth." The first issue, which appeared as a section in The Post for the first time last Sunday, was the basis of this statement.

Three sets of judges worked for days and late into the night to insure accuracy of checking. Most of the contestants listed their words alphabetically, which aided the judges in their work. Where they were not listed in this manner, the judging was more difficult, but the complete list, in such cases, was gone over word by word to prevent duplication. In this way absolute fairness was insured.

Girls showed greater persistence in compiling their word lists than boys. Five out of the six girls who won had more than 400 words, while the sixth was close on their heels. Contestants were not allowed to use words of more than five letters.

Prizes will be delivered to the winning contestants. It is not necessary to call at The Post for them.

To the hundreds of boys and girls who did not win, the Parade of Youth editors offer their appreciation for their interest. There will be other contests from time to time and the reader who did not win a prize this time may be among the winners in another contest.

Banks Murray, 14, who attends Silver Spring-Takoma Park Junior High School, at the left, is an enthusiastic reader of the Parade of Youth. "Gosh, it's all good, but I liked the story about the octopus best," Banks said. Bob Miller, 13, of 2918 Eighteenth street northwest, attends Powell Junior High School. Monday morning, Bob said, half the boys and girls in his class who were called on to talk about current events took their topics from the Parade of Youth.

Girls Find Serial in Parade of Youth Equally Exciting, But Janet Welty Prefers Jokes Because "They Take Your Mind Off Your Troubles."

Hundreds of boys and girls wrote to The Post this week to tell how much they enjoyed the first issue of the Parade of Youth, the new children's section which comes in The Sunday Post. Only a few of the letters received can be printed here. The names of the boys and girls who wrote them are given with each letter. Read them all, and see what your friends think of the Parade of Youth.

"My favorite feature in the Parade of Youth is the serial, 'Thunderbolt.' It is a peach of a story. I can hardly wait until Sunday to continue it."—Bobbie Miller, 2918 Eighteenth street northwest.

"The Parade of Youth will be very popular, I think. I liked the World News especially. 'Thunderbolt' was exciting and I can hardly wait for the next issue."—Dorothy Anne Washington, 5327 Sixteenth street northwest.

"The thing I like best in the Parade of Youth is the Funny Corner, because it takes your mind off your worries and troubles."—Janet Welty, 520 Jefferson street northwest.

"I like the Parade of Youth because it is instructive and interesting. It is something the children can read and enjoy and the mothers are never worried about what the children are reading when they are reading the Parade of Youth."—Catherine Burrows, 141 Beech street, Clarendon, Va.

Teachers Asked For Comments

Two Full Pages of Current Events Are Designed for Class Study.

Fact is as exciting as fiction to children, if it is related in a manner that they can understand. Response to the first issue of the Parade of Youth proves that one of the most popular features in this new section for children is the presentation of current events.

Two full pages of world news is presented under the heading "Around the World in News, Science, Exploration and Aviation." The facts are authentic and timely; the news is lavishly illustrated; and a large map shows in what part of the globe the events covered occurred. Response to this section of the Parade of Youth was enthusiastic. "I like the current events because they are explained so clearly and interestingly. It helped me a lot to read them, and I expect to get a better mark in school because of this column." That quotation is typical of many comments made by boys and girls.

This department of the new section is planned to be of definite value in school work. Children approve of it highly. But teachers can help in making it more valuable by offering suggestions. Does it follow the line of study of current events in the schools? Is there anything that could be added to make it still more helpful? Suggestions from teachers are invited. Letters should be addressed to the Parade of Youth, in care of The Washington Post.

Prize of $1 Is Awarded For 'Silligrin' Weekly

Did you ever try to write a "Silligrin?" It's harder than it looks, but it's fun to try, and if you write a good one, better than anyone else, a prize of $1 awaits you.

Here's how you do it. You take a letter, and write a story of not more than 50 words in which each word begins with that same letter. You may start out, "Sarah Smith sought some scholars. Scholars seldom sit still," said she, "so she selected six straightforward, sober, serious, steady students," and so on. Of course, you need not use the letter "S"; you may use any letter of the alphabet. See the "Silligrin" in the Parade of Youth tomorrow, and then write your own. The prize of $1 is awarded every week.

He Dives and Flies In Own Creations

Walter Schaefer Built Diving Helmet and Glider and They Worked!

When Walter Schaefer read about sunken treasure, he decided he'd like to go hunting for a bit of it himself. His first requisite, of course, was a diving helmet, and he didn't have one. But Walter is an ingenious lad, and so he made a helmet! What's more it worked, and Walter had the thrill of walking under water.

That was pretty fine, but Walter thought the sky must hold its thrills, too. So he set out to build himself a glider, and that worked too. For, at the age of 15, Walter is a clever mechanic.

He's versatile, also, and in his spare moments he thought he'd try his hand at photography. And then, just to fill in spare minutes, he plays in a band.

These are just a few of the exploits of this boy genius. His whole story, an inspiration to every other boy, is told in tomorrow's Parade of Youth, which comes as a section of The Washington Post on Sundays.

Readers Cheer "The Parade"

Boys and Girls Find Stories of Youthful Achievement Are Inspirational; Jokes Are Great and Other Features Well Liked.

"The Parade of Youth is very interesting to read and it is very funny. No other paper has a story like 'Thunderbolt.'"—Golda Brein, 10 Sheridan street northwest.

"The Parade of Youth has very interesting stories that are decent for the children to read and good clean jokes. I would like to have you print some riddles each Sunday."—Marie Mary Miller, 4011 Gault place northeast.

"The stories of the discovery of bones of different animals interested me as it gave me some idea of how the animals looked over a thousand years ago."—Mary Gilroy, Manassas, Va.

"I like the pictures because they are interesting, easy to take in at a glance, and show what the rest of us are doing."—Bob Saunders, 4523 Klingle street northwest.

"I think the stories you have selected are swell. In fact, I think the whole paper is well organized."—Grayson Johnson, 50 East Myrtle avenue, Rosemont Park, Alexandria, Va.

"The Parade of Youth is great. It feels so good to have part of the paper all mine when Dad starts on The Sunday Post."—Tom Payne, 4729 Thirteenth street northwest.

"I love to read the Parade of Youth, especially the stories about the mechanical things boys make, because I am always trying to make or build something myself."—Vernon S. Green, jr., 181 S street northwest.

"I am very glad to see that at last some paper has put out a section for children alone, and hope it will be a big success. There are many things I would like to see in this section, but I think a column devoted to model airplanes is the desire of most boys of my age.

"I like the Parade of Youth very much but best of all I like Around the World in News because the stories are so interesting. The map is a great help and I can cut the stories out for my current events class in school."—Virginia de Lima, 2312 Twentieth street northwest.

"I like the Parade of Youth because it is just what children are looking for. It helps them so much that I think every family in Washington should take at least The Sunday Post."—Mabel Harrison, 2452 Alabama avenue southeast.

"The reason that I like the fun corner best is because I get a great kick laughing about it. Some of the jokes are very interesting."—Rhea Weymouth, R. F. D. No. 1, Alexandria, Va.

"I like best the stories of girls who do things, even though they are afraid, like Dorothy Forbes, the speed swimmer. She is brave."—Eleanor Brown, 10 Mason street, Cherrydale, Va.

Caral Gimbel Is the Bride Of Mr. Lasker

Bridegroom Is Son of Former Chairman of Ship Board.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

A marriage of interest to Capital society which took place yesterday was that of Miss Caral G. Gimbel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard F. Gimbel, of Chieftans, Port Chester, N. Y., and Mr. Edward Lasker, son of the former chairman of the United States Shipping Board, and Mrs. Albert D. Lasker, of Lake Forest, Ill.

The ceremony was performed at 4:30 o'clock by the Rev. Samuel H. Goldenson, D. D., at the home of the bride's parents before an improvised altar, which was arranged against a background of tall cybotium tree ferns, calla lilies, budlea and farleyence ferns. Above hung a large shell-shaped canopy covered with masses of the same flowers. On either side of the altar were seven-branched cathedral candelabra, garlanded with calla lilies and white budlea, having the effect of living candelabra of flowers.

The short stairway leading to the platform where the ceremony was performed was decorated with growing and cut calla lilies, and the balustrade of white satin and grill work was also garlanded with ferns, lilies and budlea. An aisle to the platform was marked on either side with eight large candlesticks holding white candles entirely garlanded with calla lilies, budlea and maiden-hair ferns. A rope of white silk cord and tassels was draped along each row of candles.

Bride Wears Ivory Satin.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of ivory satin made on princess lines with a high neckline edged with a small turned-down collar. The skirt ended in a long train, and the fitted sleeves were finished with narrow cuffs. The voluminous tulle veil fell from a Tudoresque headdress embroidered with seed pearls. The bride carried a small, satin-covered Bible, from which fell white satin ribbons covered with sprays of tiny white orchids and lilies of the valley.

Miss Hope Alva Gimbel was maid of honor for her sister, and wore a frock of red organza with a fitted bodice and a full skirt. The neckline and hem of the skirt were trimmed with white ruffled organdie. She wore a Marie Duc hat of red horsehair, and carried a princess shaped basket filled with apple blossom buds and red and white camellias.

The bridesmaids were Miss Miriam Francis, of St. Louis; Miss Josephine Taggart, of Watertown, N. Y.; Miss Frances Lasker, of Lake Forest, a sister of the bridegroom; Miss Nancy Strauss, of New York City; Miss Helen Spaulding and Miss Anne Berdell, of Greenwich, Conn. They wore gowns similar to that of the maid of honor and carried garden baskets filled with white, red and purple anemones and maidenhair ferns.

Mr. Justin Godchaux, of New Orleans, was best man, and the ushers were Mr. James Dryenforth, of London; Mr. John Upshur Moorhead, of Washington and New York; Mr. Joseph Bullman 3d., Mr. Steve Hannagan, Mr. John Wolf and Mr. George Sherman, all of New York, and Mr. Bruce A. Gimbel, brother of the bride.

Reception Is Held.

A reception followed the ceremony, and later there was a supper for the bridal party. The U-shaped bridal table was garlanded with lilies of the valley, white sweet peas, and white lilac, and bowls of the same flowers were placed along the length of the table. In the dining room on the buffet table were two tall vases of crystal filled with pale blue delphinium, lilies and white budlea.

Young Mr. Lasker made his home in Washington for several years when his father was chairman of the Shipping Board, and the bride has been a frequent visitor here where she is well known as an enthusiastic and adept equestrienne.

Incidentally, the music to be used by the orchestra for the splendid pageant-processional entitled "Marco Polo Revisits the Orient" has been chosen after careful research at the Library of Congress on the part of Mrs. Miriam B. Hilton and Mr. Slaughter, the former being chairman of the music committee for the pageant; with Dr. Hans Kindler as musical adviser.

Chinese Fantasy Included.

One of the pieces to be used is a short Chinese fantasy by Francis Casadesus. Another is "Chinese Tea House," by Alfred Bortz, especially arranged for the Bal Boheme. Oriental numbers composed by Julian Porret, Paul Selig, Rebikoff, Silvio Hein, G. Lubomirsky, and others will make up the succession of selections that will add color to the processional as it passes down the Willard ballroom toward the giant Buddha which dominates the south end of the room.

When the orchestra is not engaged in playing for the entrance of the floor committee headed by Fulton Lewis, for the pageant processional, or for the grand march before the judges' box, it will suddenly change its theme — and modern dance rhythms will call the throngs to the dance floor for dancing.

Huge turbans ornamented with glittering jewels will add an Oriental touch to the garb of the musicians, for at this ball "fancy dress" is obligatory.

Any Young Man Will Like These New Sport Suits

Pleated Coats With Spacious Patch Pockets Feature Low-Priced Outfit.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

IF THERE'S a young man in your family between the ages 16 and 20, inveigle him to go shopping with you today. It will require little persuasion if you promise to take him by the young men's shop in a local store where are featured some of the snappiest, jauntiest sports suits to be shown this season.

You remember, no doubt, how strong and he-mannish-looking was Clark Gable in "It Happened One Nnght?" Well, these suits are almost exactly like those he wore in that picture, and they do indeed make even a scrawny little fellow look like a real hero.

They have the yoke and pleats in the back of the coat, and in front, four spacious patch pockets. Since they are available in a variety of colors there'll be no difficulty finding one that suits.

Seventeen ninety-five is their conservative price and certainly unbelievedly low when you consider they are two-trouser suits and made by a manufacturer whose name is synonymous with style and quality.

Incidentally if the young son happens to be a tall thin lad, tell him his size is especially catered to in this young men's department.

Refrigerator Sets.

It's an awful nuisance hunting the the house over for small containers in which to store the "left overs" in the refrigerator. It's equally inconvenient to grope through the whole refrigerator for the jar with the right contents.

Both these domestic problems are satisfactorily solved by the refrigerator sets featured in the household department of a downtown store. The sets include six pint jars which are held on a wire tray to fit over the refrigerator shelf. The jars are so arranged that by pushing one they all revolve in a circle so that you can reach the one you want in a jiffy.

The set costs very little and will prove a big saving in time and convenience.

Ornamenting the Kitchen.

The kitchen for many long years was one of those "taken for granted" rooms. It wasn't supposed to be attractive and consequently it wasn'. But time has changed all that. Kitchens have come to the fore as having untold possibilities. Inventors have wracked their brains for new gadgets which are both ornamental and practical. Interior decorators have shown amazing skill in converting kitchens into pleasant rooms in which the housework is easier than ever to perform.

One of the foremost steps in this direction centers around the under-sink cabinets such as those on display in a local store. These are made of white sheet automobile steel and fit compactly under the sink.

They are divided into several compartments, one for the garbage, the others for silver, cloths, and kitchen utensils. They are valuable space-savers and add infinitely to the appearance of your kitchen.

"High-Jacs" For Highballs.

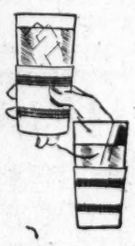
We are being literally hi-jacked into the highball habit. A certain ingenious manufacturer has invented little woolen jackets for glasses and these he calls "hi-jacs," They fit over the bottom part of the glass and stretch upward several inches. This enables you to get an easy grip and practically does away with the danger of dropping your glass.



The jackets cause the hostess to give a sigh of relief. With these around the glasses she need no longer fear that some unscrupulous guest will allow his glass to leave rings on the arms of the chair or on the top of the grand piano. Besides the jackets have a tendency to prevent the ice from melting so quickly and they also help keep the drink cold for a longer time.

Reversible Ironing Board.

The reversible ironing board cover and pad requires no tying, no lacing. It has no loose pads to bulge, and it washes perfectly.

Is it small wonder that a household item with as many points to its credit is selling like hot cakes in a local store?

Balbriggans for 79 Cents.

Down, down they come in price, but up in our estimation. That's the balbriggans selling now for 79 cents. In their delicate pastel tints they're quite resistible. Wear one on a frigid night and you'll agree they've as much wear-apparel as eye-appeal!

One joy about these balbriggans is the fact that they take to water like a duck. You can wash them, scrub them and they still remain as serviceable as the day they were bought.

Those displayed at a downtown store come in rose, tea rose, blue and pink, and sizes small, medium and large. Remember in buying yours the tighter they fit the warmer they are. And even though they cling like paper on the wall they'll "give" enough to be completely comfortable.

House Dress Is Flattering To All Types of Figures

Pattern No. 811.

THIS IS THAT unusual fashion, a "home-maker frock" with an air of simple dignity that makes it more versatile than the average house dress. Simple to sew, and requiring very little material, it is a practical dress for the amateur dressmaker. The large, clear instruction chart which accompanies the pattern is of great help at every step. For the experienced needlewoman, this frock will take less than a day to make.

This dress would be charming in a dainty new cotton print, and in size 18 (36) would require only 3¾ yards. The pattern is made in sizes 14 to 42, and is equally flattering to all types of figures.

Culbertson on Bridge

Rubber vs. Trophy Bridge.

Many people say they will not play rubber bridge because they are poor card holders or claim that the game injures their sense of relative card values. Others can find no great thrill in the duplicate contests since luck plays no part, theoretically. But try to get either proponent to give up the game. It can't be done.

There is a wide difference in the two kinds of games. Rubber bridge calls for entirely different styles of strategy, a closer inspection of point position and a keener card instinct. Grand slams are the black beasts to be carefully watched—carefully guarded against or carefully reached. One of them may change an afternoon's score from the red to the black. It strains the nervous tension which to many means greater thrills.

Duplicate equalizes the cards to some extent and provides an evening's entertainment that depends not upon one big hand. It is a splendid yardstick for your game.

Dangerous Doubles.

Some Penalty Doubles look as safe and as solid as the Rock of Gibraltar, but turn out to be only a mirage.

2—Sharpening up the axe.
3—A sound double raise.
4—South has a King better than North may reasonably expect. This justifies a "shot" at game.
5—The bidding seemed too good to be true, and West licked his chops.

The Play.

West opened the Ace and a small trump since with so much top strength he was anxious to reduce the hand to notrumps as quickly as possible. Declarer won the second trump and immediately led the ten of hearts. West, who had inwardly groaned when the dummy went down, decided to make the best of a bad bargain and covered with the King. The top hearts were now cashed, declarer discarding a diamond on the third heart, after which a club was led from the dummy. When East played low, declarer saw no point in putting up the King and therefore ducked. West returned the King of diamonds hopefully, but the jig was up. The Ace of diamonds was taken, and declarer ruffed himself in, ruffed a club, ruffed himself in again, and now ruffed out the Ace of clubs, after which his last trump and the King of clubs were good for the contract and an overtrick.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Measuring the Child's Intelligence.

SOME 30 years ago a French psychologist, Alfred Binet, was faced with the task of selecting for special training school children of a certain mental type. Much to his surprise he found no testing device available and he was forced to plan a series of mental exercises arranged in order of increasing difficulty. As a result of his work it was discovered that an approximate mental age could be arrived at. His first series of tests was published in 1908.

Revisions were made from time to time and the plan now used follows what is known as the Stanford Revision of the Binet-Simon test. Theodore Simon collaborated with Binet.

The youngster who is not doing well in the face of severe competition may develop traits of evasiveness and subterfuge and become an expert in inventing alibis. Sometimes true psychic disturbances occur and the groundwork may be laid for neuroses in later life. The importance, therefore, of not crowding the child beyond the status of his mental age can not be too strongly emphasized. An intelligence test sometimes detects precocious children who are apt to burn out early and who require to be slowed down in their mental development.

The intelligence quotient (I. Q.) is the figure derived by dividing the mental age—determined as a result of the examination—by the actual age and multiplying by 100. For example, if the mental age is shown by the test to be 5 years and the actual age is 10 years, 5 is divided by 10 and the result is an intelligence quotient of .5, or 50. Again, if the mental age is 12 and the actual age is 10, 12 is divided by 10, and we have an I. Q. of 120.

Based upon tens of thousands of examinations, the following conclusions have been drawn: An I. Q. of 140 indicates genius; 120-140, very superior intelligence; 110-120, superior intelligence; 90-110, average intelligence; 80-90, dullness; 70-80, dullness with deficiency; 50-70, moron.

In order that the test shall be effective, it is obvious that the child's attention must be wholly devoted to the examination. No child should be tested if he is physically ill. Quiet and seculsion are essential and the child and examiner should be in a room alone, free from interruption. Responses will be more accurate if the attitude of the examiner is one of encouragement.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Should Woman Marry Man for Whom She Feels Only Friendship?

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH:

Does the time ever come when a woman is safe at last from the hurt of a broken heart? Three times my life has been smashed to bits by the fact of loving. I am a woman just 40. My first husband died, leaving me with a daughter now 16. A second marriage ended in divorce, through no wish of mine. That was five years ago. I thought then I was done with feeling.

• • • •

Last summer I met a man under rather unusual circumstances and we fell in love almost at first sight. He made ardent love to me, and wakened me out of my apathy. Just when I discovered I could not bear to consider a future without him, he told me he was promised to marry another woman and could not break his pledge; that, until he met me, he had loved her for years, and that at the time he met me, she was securing a divorce to marry him. He is 38 and has never been married. The other woman is 37. They are to be married soon. We parted, of course, and I haven't seen him since, and if it were not for my child, I would not care to go on living.

• • • •

There is another man, an old friend of my first husband's, who has been a devoted suitor of mine since I was first widowed. He is a widower of 47, with three grown children. He is cultured, gentlemanly, kind, fine looking. But I have never been able to force myself, try as I would, to care for him. A week ago he came to see me and urged me to marry him. He knows, of course, about my feeling for this other man. He says he understands and respects my belief that a woman should marry only for love, but that he believes he can make me really happy, and that in time I will come to love him. He says at my age, a woman needs peace and security more than she needs romantic love.

• • • •

Should I turn my back forever on love, and marry this man for friendship and protection? Do you think there is a chance I may find happiness in doing so? GRISELDA.

Sometimes Feasible.

DEAR GRISELDA: The emotional anchorage of married companionship is of immeasurable value to the woman in her forties, who must in that decade achieve an almost complete psychological and physiological readjustment to life. Your 47-year-old suitor is more than half right in saying a woman of your age needs peace and security more than she needs romantic love.

• • • •

It might be, in holding fast to an unalterable conviction that romantic love is the only justification for marriage, you are overlooking certain congenial qualities of personality and character in this man which would make him the ideal husband for you. One of America's outstanding psychologists says romantic love is fetishism, whereas lasting married happiness is based on friendship and an adjusted physical relationship.

• • • •

In the last analysis, I think you have as great a chance of finding happiness in marrying this friend of many years' standing, who has proven the quality of his devotion by his patience and understanding, as you would have in marrying some stranger after a whirlwind romance. After all, you have experienced two romantic marriages, both of which brought their mead of grief. Why not try a third, based on friendship? I would think the matter over very carefully before rejecting this man's proposal. It has merit. M. H.

What Today Means

"Aquarius."

IF FEBRUARY 2 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:45 to 11:45 a. m., from 2:45 to 4:45 p. m. and from 7:45 to 9:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:45 to 8:45 a. m., from 11:45 a. m. to 1:45 p. m. and from 9:45 to 11:45 p. m.

This February 2's morning hours are apt to be trying, unless you keep a clear head and make up your mind in advance to do things systematically. You will possibly have a very delightful time socially, later in the day, which should more than compensate for any undue exertion you have been called on to make during the morning's rush hours. Should you be invited to take part in what might amount to be a rash adventure, think twice before committing yourself.

If a woman and February 2 is your birthday, you are probably susceptible to influences which will help both your mental and spiritual development. You are capable of doing a great deal of good as the result of serious consideration of the worth-while things of life. As you advance in years your ideas may undergo a radical change for the better.

The child born on February 2, usually when it reaches its teens, shows a decided change in its general character, displaying admirable traits that have been unsuspected.

If a man and February 2 is your natal day, you will find it highly profitable to devote part of each day to intellectual pursuits. You have not only a retentive mind but one that absorbs important details. Technical work involving research, educational work, writing and the medical or legal profession should offer a man of your ability a chance to gain the proper financial reward.

Proper Collar Style Is Essential to Set Off Men's Varying Features to the Best Advantage

Square, Oval And Full Faces Prove Problems

Expert Gives Advice on Most Suitable Shirting Fabrics.

By M. A. Weiss.

THE LADIES, God bless 'em, have acted as emissaries in buying our shirts. They have an unfailing eye for value and color . . . but alack and alas . . . color, fabric and value alone won't give you the greatest amount of shirt satisfaction.

Gaze, gentlemen, at the hapless males whose illustrations appear in the left hand column. There's value, and fabric here, but Mr. Ovalface, with his long countenance and longish face has forgotten that he boasts a rather prominent Adam's apple. In his search for a comfortable collar, he (or Mrs. Ovalface) picked out the lowest cut, shortest band collar he could find. Result? His neck looks like a segement of the Washington monument and his head is a dirigible floating above it. How much better he would look in the collar illustrated on the right. His long face and neck demand a collar that minimizes the accented, the egg and dart combination of his features. It should be of medium height with points agreeably spread. This type can wear the tabless tab collar and do it justice. Horizontal striped collars take the curse off his length of feature.

Mr. Squareface, beneath him, is a geometric mass of angles, planes and cubes. His neck is rather long and corded. In an effort to hide this he puts on a tall close-fitting collar, which only serves to emphasize his angular features. At the right he has chosen a collar that fits him and his face. It's medium banded and medium height. It covers the ugle expanse, but leaves most of his neck exposed. The pin gives vertical lines and helps a broadening effect. The drooping points accentuate this illusion.

Problem of Fullface.

The good-natured, chubby Mr. Fullface (the boys called him Kewpie when he played tackle for dear old Siwash) is ponderous of top and boasts a 17 collar. He's taken that bull neck and wrapped it in a long, deep-pointed collar so that his flesh and jowls boil over the top like coffee that's been heated too long. Switch the scene to Mr. Fullface on the right.

He's taken a low-banded collar (the Wales model) with a medium-wide spread. This shows part of his neck and doesn't divorce his head from his body. It creates a trim illusion mating his features to his torso, so that they consort happily.

So much for type. What about pattern and color, you ask? Simple enough. Most men wear white shirts all the time. But that's perhaps merely because of indolence. He's just a bit smarter if he lets his shirt contrast with his suit. He can wear checks with anything except a checked suit. If he's smart, he'll follow the basic rule not to overdo anything in his ensemble . . . checks, stripes, plaids, figures and colors all have their places . . . but there's no place for too much of a good thing.

The tallish, thin man will do well to steer clear of vertically striped shirts, and if his short, stout brother will pass up the horizontal stripes, both will be better off. Almost every man can wear the right type of stripe, just as well as he can wear whites . . . if he chooses judiciously. Figures are becoming to all . . . particularly rich are clipped figures on colored grounds.

AIR STEWARDESS

By VIDA HURST

Irene Gardner becomes an air stewardess so that the thrill and adventure of being far above petty troubles will help her to forget Dr. Bart Ralston. Bart plans to marry Peggy Reagan, daughter of a famous surgeon, merely to further his ambition for a medical career.

In a few months Irene is no longer disturbed by thoughts of Bart. Instead she finds herself drawn to gay, impudent Barney O'Sullivan, one of the pilots. Despite her protests, he accepts the challenge of her resistance to love-making and kisses her soundly. Even while she protests, Irene knows that she couldn't resist his kisses.

Peggy is jealous of Bart's renewed interest in Irene, but later realizes she may as well face the fact that Bart doesn't love her. She assures Irene solemnly that she has come to her senses.

FOR the remainder of the evening she clung closely to Stephen as if he could protect her. And in the week which followed, Bartlett did not ask her again

The situation between Eve and Virginia seemed rather strained but Bill continued to appear uninterested in Eve's now obvious efforts to ensnare him.

It amused her that Peggy should consider her so dumb yet she suspected that it was innocent enough. Peggy might be undeveloped emotionally but even Peggy had too much sense to pick up an acquaintance with a stranger.

Nevertheless, the luncheon depressed her. Peggy was so restless. If Bartlett didn't pay more attention to her after they were married she was bound to get into trouble.

"It will be a relief to escape from all these worries by flying to San Diego tomorrow," the air hostess thought. But when she entered the Alameda Airport the following day, she was annoyed to learn that her pilot was to be the wild Irishman who had kissed and laughed at her just a week ago.

Irene went home, determined to ransack the apartment in her effort to find the uniform, but this proved unnecessary. She had no sooner opened her closet door than the uniform appeared, hanging neatly in place among her other dresses.

But it couldn't have been there when she looked before. She must be crazy. While she was wondering about it, the telephone rang. It was the chief stewardess and her voice was serious.

"Come back right away, Irene! I want to talk with you."

She found out soon enough. The older woman did not mince matters.

"Where were you Monday morning between 1 and 3?"

"At home in bed. Why?"

"What time did you go to bed?"

"About 10. I was dead tired when I got home from Los Angeles."

Who Was the Girl?

"A girl was seen drinking in a speakeasy in Emeryville between 1 and 3 that morning wearing an air hostess' uniform."

Irene gasped.

"But it couldn't have been me. You surely don't think I'd do such a thing?"

"I know it wasn't you because this girl was a blonde but all the blondes on the line—there are only five of them—happened to be working. You admit you lost your uniform?"

"Yes, but I found it when I went home today. Hanging in my closet, where I thought it had put it."

"Do you know of any one who might have worn it and put it back later?"

"I live with Paula's sister," she admitted reluctantly. "But I can't believe she would do such a thing."

The chief stewardess looked grim.

Eve Was Not There.

"Better get rid of her, Irene! Because of the fact that the girl was a blonde and couldn't have been one of our girls, nothing will be done about it this time. But if it happens again—in your uniform—no matter how innocent you may be, if will cost you your job."

Irene went home, prepared to have it out with Eve. But the other girl did not return.

She was sitting in the firelight, wearing a plain little dress she used to wear on her days off at the hospital, when there was a knock at the door and she opened it to Bart. And for the first time in months she saw him as he used to look. Masterful, self-confident, happy.

"I took a chance on finding you at home," he cried. "I had to come. Peggy has told me everything."

Irene stared at him.

"Do you mean about her trip to Los Angeles?"

Engagement Broken.

"Yes, and the part you played in it. Darling, you're wonderful! I've always known it. I've always been in love with you."

She drew away from his encircling arms.

"Just a moment, Bart! Sit down and explain it to me."

"Everything is going to be all right for us, Irene. I'm so happy I'm still in a daze.

"Peggy has broken our engagement. She did it of her own accord. She says she knows now she never loved me any more than I did her."

"But your work with Dr Reagan?" Irene interrupted.

"Stephen Reagan is the finest person who ever lived. I'd give my life for him. We talked for almost two hours this afternoon and he told me, no matter what had happened between Peggy and me, he still wanted me for his assistant.

Forgetting herself, Irene leaned toward him.

"That's wonderful, Bart. You deserve it and I'm so happy for you. I can imagine how much it means to you."

"It means the first free breath I've drawn for weeks," the doctor admitted, throwing back his head, his eyes shining. "It means regaining my self-respect."

Implusively he rose and dropped beside the stool where Irene was sitting.

Still Loved Her.

"It also means that we can be married at once, darling! There is no reason under heaven why we should wait even another month."

She was pushing him away from her with determined arms.

"But there is, a very important reason . . . "

The doctor laughed, and imprisoned her fluttering hands in a grasp like steel.

"Don't be capricious and feminine at this point. Haven't I suffered enough? What is to be gained by punishing me?"

"I'm not," she denied. "I forgave you a long time ago. It's too late now, that's all."

"It's never too late if we love each other."

"But that's just it," she insisted. "We don't."

"I adore you. I always did. I never once said I didn't."

"But I don't love you any more, Bart. I'm sorry, but it's all over."

Unwilling to believe her even then, Bart asked. "Do you mean that you have fallen in love with someone else?"

"Yes, I do," Irene admitted.

Loving Hearts Suggestion Takes Second, Valentine Salad Third.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THE PRIZE WINNING recipes in The Post's recipe contest this week offer many appealing suggestions to the woman who is planning refreshments for a Valentine party.

First prize, $3, is awarded to Mrs. George W. Turner, 4610 Chestnut street, Bethesda, Md., for her recipe for strawberry pie. Second prize, $2, goes to Miss Marie E. Moran, 2416 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, for her recipe for loving hearts, and third prize, $1, to Miss Yvonne Hoskins, 3705 South Dakota avenue northeast, for her recipe for Valentine salad.

The recipes follow in the order mentioned above.

Strawberry Pie With Graham Cracker Crust.

16 graham crackers, rolled fine
1 teaspoon flour
½ cup granulated sugar
1 teaspoon cinnamon
½ cup melted butter

Mix as for any pie crust. Line pie plate, pressing crust into shape, and bake in moderate oven about 8 to 10 minutes. Cool.

Filling.

1 package strawberry flavored gelatin.
1½ cups warm water
1 quart fresh strawberries

Make gelatin as directions state omitting one-half cup of water. Line crust with hulled berries, sprinkle with ¼ cup powdered sugar. As gelatin starts to thicken pour it over the berries. Put in ice box to set. Serve with sweetened whipped cream.

This pie may be easily cut into eight servings. By using a cake decorator when applying the whipped cream the effect of a lace valentine may be obtained. If you prefer, you may make an outer edge of whipped cream and eight small heart shapes on the top of the pie.

Loving Hearts.

2 cups granulated sugar
2 teaspoons desired flavoring
2 cups egg whites
Pinch of salt

Add salt to egg whites, beat stiff, add sugar by spoonfuls until half is used, then beat stiff. Fold in the rest of the sugar, shape in small hearts with tube on stiff white paper. Put on board soaked in water. Bake 40 minutes at 275 degrees F., then increase heat to 320 degrees F. to color. Cool. Remove centers and fill with strawberry ice cream or raspberry ice. Serve in pairs on lace doilies on plates.

Valentine Salad.

1 cup cooked chicken
1 cup mayonnaise
½ cup minced celery
¾ cup stock of chicken
1 bunch heart celery, leave it in stalks
1 firm boiled beet
1 heaping tablespoon gelatin

Slice beet crosswise, using sharp knife, and cutting slices very thin. With small vegetable cutter or scissors cut slices heart shape and lay on blotting paper to drain free of juice. Cover gelatin with cold water for 5 minutes. Heat chicken stock and season with pepper, celery salt and a little onion juice, and dissolve gelatin in it. Stir to keep gelatin from settling, and when it has dissolved add to the stock the minced celery and three-quarters of the mayonnaise. Wet mold with ice water, turn in the stock to one-half inch depth. When hard arrange a thin ring of strips trimmed from the beet, then a little more of the stock. When this is hard, arrange the beet hearts around the sides of the mold, then by spoonfuls carefully turn in more of the stock, which has been kept liquid over hot water. Cover beets by degrees with the stock, reserving just enough to wet the chicken, which should be minced. Put in first another ring of the beet strips, then fill up with the stock. When ready to serve dip mold for a few seconds in hot water and invert on serving platter, which should be perfectly flat. Border with stalk celery cut in slender straws and blanched in ice water, and over these put the remainder of the ice water.

Use small round gumdrops.

Wire about eight together to form a cluster of buds. Use pastel colors for buds, green for leaves. After the bouquet is wired, take a tiny lace paper doilie and put behind your buds, thus forming an old-fashioned bouquet.

Cherry Mess.

1 tablespoon granulated gelatin
¼ cup boiling water
½ cup cherry juice
Few grains salt
¼ cup cold water
1½ cups dark red canned cherries
Whites 2 eggs.

Soak gelatin in cold water, dissolve in boiling water and add cherries (stoned and cut in halves) and cherry juice. When mixture begins to thicken add whites of egg beaten until stiff, and salt. Turn into chilled heart molds and chill until firm. Remove from molds and garnish with whipped cream (sweetened and flavored with vanilla) and sprinkle with Jordan almonds, blanched, shredded and roasted or chopped pistachio nut meats.

Post Contest Now Invites Soup Recipes

IS SOUP MAKING an unknown culinary accomplishment among American housewives? No, is the stout reply to all foreign chefs who scoff at the idea that an American can make a good soup.

Next week we are going to try to prove that the housewives, in Washington at least, know their soups. The Post's recipe contest will be devoted entirely to soup recipes. Send us a recipe that is a real American dish, a soup with character and distinction.

This cold weather has certainly turned your attention to hot dishes, and soup was probably one of the first to come to your table. Every housewife should be all set with a good soup recipe that stands a fair chance of winning a prize.

All recipes should be sent to Dorothea Duncan, Home Economics Editor of The Washington Post. Three prizes will be awarded, $3 for the best recipe, $2 for the second best, and $1 for the third best.

Type your recipes if possible. If not, write them neatly in ink. Check all recipes carefully for omissions. The name and address of the sender should appear on each recipe received.

All recipes submitted should be received on or before Thursday of next week.

Harvard Scholarship Higher, Says Dean

A general improvement in scholarship among Harvard College undergraduates has taken place in the last ten years, according to a survey made by Dean A. Chester Hanford. A decrease in the number of students dropped for low marks also has been noted for the same period.

Dean Hanford believes the improved scholarship is due to the system of general examinations, the tutors, the houses, the improvement in the quality of men admitted and the new arrangements in the freshman year.

'Wind' Power May Take Place of Coal and Oil

Coal, gasoline and oil will soon be unnecessary, according to two Jugoslavian scientists, inventors of a machine which generates electricity from the wind, thus producing energy at extremely low cost. Wind-swept mountains of Slovenia and Dalmatia will supply all Jugoslavia with enough power to drive trains and to turn the wheels of industry, according to the inventors.

Relief Plans At Standstill In Assembly

Nice's Advisers Propose $8,000,000 Bond Issue to Meet Problem.

Bill Asks Appeals Court Prescribe Qualifications for Bar.

(Staff Correspondent of The Post).

Annapolis, Feb. 1.—The General Assembly today ended the fifth week of its biennial session without further advancing emergency financial relief legislation designed to raise $1,500,000 working capital, an immediate need to offset a deficit of more than $2,000,000, foreseen by the close of the fiscal year in September.

The situation is being studied from various angles, although outstanding proposals appear to be the sale of the State's annuity in the Northern Central Railway, calculated to yield $2,250,000, and adoption of a pending bill to place a tax of $1 a barrel on beer.

Meanwhile, Gov. Nice's financial advisory committee came forward with a proposal for an $8,000,000 bond issue to supply funds needed from now until September 30 for the State deficit and unemployment relief. Rigid economy in State expenditures during the interim and in drafting the budget was urged. The committee also suggested revenue measures to produce $4,000,000 for each of the next two years.

Examination of records shows that the present Assembly is running neck and neck with that of 1933. A total of 179 bills have been placed on file, compared with 167 two years ago. Two local bills and a joint resolution are all that have found their way through the channels so far.

Bill Affects Maryland Bar.

A bill vesting in the Maryland Court of Appeals power to prescribe educational and other qualifications of persons seeking registration as law students and admission to the bar was among the new measures placed on file.

Backed by the Maryland Bar Association and the Bar of Baltimore City, the measure was presented by Senator Ridgely P. Melvin (Democrat), Anne Arundel County.

The House adpoted a favorable report by the Ways and Means Committee on the bill by Delegate Evans (Democrat), Somerset, to exempt work boats and tractors from the State gasoline tax. The committee amended the measure to include sawmills.

In view of the attitude of officials of the Potomac Edison Co., concerning a rearrangement of its rates on a fairer level, Senator Robert Kimble (Republican), Allegany County, announced his determination to sponsor a proposal empowering the City of Cumberland to establish a municipal power plant. Two years ago, when Senator Kimble was a member of the House, he advocated a similar bill that was defeated, and the project was one of the main points of his senatorial campaign last fall.

Montgomery Bills Up.

Two new bills embracing local legislation for Montgomery County were presented and other measures were advanced before adjournment until Tuesday night.

The new proposals were offered jointly by Delegates Cantrel and Magruder, Fusion representatives. One reduces the salary of the supervisor of school property from $2,500 to $2,000 and limits the expense allowance to $300, while the other would require the school board to appoint a supervisor with concurrence of the county commissioners. At present the appointment is made by the commissioners.

The House received a favorable report on the bill by the Montgomery delegation to license airports, but the measure was recommitted to the aviation committee on request of Delegate Howard, Baltimore County, who said the State Aviation Commission wanted a hearing.

Other actions included the following:

House—Adoption of favorable reports on bills making it unlawful for retail dealers to sell alcoholic beverages on Sunday, reducing salary of police commissioner from $1,200 to $600, reducing traveling expenses of members of the school board from $300 to $100, and prohibiting county commissioners from having pecuniary interest in any transactions involving expenditure of funds.

Senate—Passed and sent to House Senator Prescott's bill authorizing county treasurer to appoint two assistants at salaries of $2,400 and $1,800, authorizing county commissioners to furnish additional clerks at salaries not to exceed $1,200 each, and to levy taxes to pay salaries and bond premiums of these officials.

Other introductions included two bills by Delegate Carrico, Democrat, Charles, providing for appeals to the State supervisor of schools in all cases where teachers are suspended or dismissed by county school boards, and making persons acting in disorderly manner on property of another in Charles County, subject to disorderly conduct charge, and fixing the penalty at $1 to $25 fine and, in case of default, imprisonment for 30 days.

Railroad Annuity In Effect Since 1854

Baltimore, Feb. 1 (AP).—The annuity of $90,000 from the Northern Central Railroad which the State proposes to sell for $2,571,000 cash, has been in effect since 1854. In this 81-year period it has yielded the State $7,290,000.

The annuity is guaranteed for 975 more years by the Pennsylvania Railroad, and the total amount since 1854 accruing to the State would be $95,040,000 up to the year 2010.

Maryland attained the annuity on the investment of $1,500,000 in the stock of the Baltimore & Susquehanna Railroad at the time of its formation. In 1854 that and three other railroads were merged into one system named the Northern Central Railroad. Bonds of the new company were given the State in exchange for its stock ownership in the Baltimore & Susquehanna line. The bonds guaranteed the $90,000 annuity "in perpetuity."

In 1911 the Pennsylvania Railroad leased the Northern Central for a period of 999 years, or until 2010. It pays an annual rental of $2,166,368 over and above all expenses, including taxes.

Shortly after the Civil War, the Maryland General Assembly inserted in its revised constitution a clause—decreeing that the annuity could not be sold except to reduce the State debt. Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor, acting on this decree, has notified the General Assembly that its sale for the purpose of applying the proceeds to general expenses would be unconstitutional, but bonds may be sold to this amount and then the annuity may be sold to retire the bonds.

100 Million Works Asked For Virginia

Program to Be Offered Today to State PWA Representative.

Water, Park and Power Projects Are Listed by Commission.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 1 (AP). — A Virginia conservation and development program which would cost nearly $100,000,000 will be proposed to the Public Works Administration tomorrow by Commissioner Wilbur C. Hall.

Responding to the call for projects to be financed under President Roosevelt's $4,880,000,000 expanded works program, Chairman Hall has set up a long-time, far-reaching program of the work the commission has cut out for it, and will submit it to Col. James A. Anderson, Virginia engineer for the PWA.

A tentative draft of the program tonight indicated the policy of the new Conservation and Development Commission, which has been functioning for only one month, will be to push the development of Virginia's water resources and power possibilities, emphasize the probable results of a complete geological survey, and complete the park system.

Water, Power Works Lead.

The program includes recommendations from all five of the commission's divisions — water resources and power division, parks, geological survey, forestry and history and archeology.

The final total of the project costs has not been made by Commissioner Hall, but the indications were that it would reach the $100,000,000 mark.

With project recommendations involving a cost of $59,618,405, the water resources and power division led the list. Other large items were those for the proposed geological survey and the park system completion. R. E. Burson, diretcor of parks, said he could use $10,000,000 on the parks.

Breaking down the water resources and power division recommendation, the request will include $19,997,200 for hydro plants (James River), $39,465,800 for hydro plants (Roanoke River), $12,000 for study of rural electrification, $91,105 for an investigation of water resources, $21,800 for an inventory of resources, $5,700 for springs of Virginia, and $24,800 for water supply of the extension of the Skyline drive.

Regional Surveys Asked.

Application will be made for regional surveys of all the recreational areas in the State.

Projects submitted by the Division of Geological Survey will be: Topographic surveying; Floyd, Patrick, Franklin counties, two quadrangles of 470 square miles, Halifax, Pittsylvania counties two quadrangles of 470 square miles, Halifax, Charlotte, Mecklenburg counties four quadrangles of 940 square miles, Lunenburg, Mecklenburg counties four quadrangles of 940 square miles, Farmville quadrangle remapped, Lynchburg quadrangle remapped, other areas would be remapped according to needs for resources inventory and State planning.

Citizens to Vote On Power Unit

Municipal Lighting Plant May Be Constructed in Cumberland.

Cumberland, Md., Feb. 1 (AP).—The proposals to establish a municipal lighting plant for Cumberland is to be submitted to a vote of the citizens on July 1.

The city council, by a margin of a single vote, today authorized Lewis M. Wilson, city solicitor, to draft the proposition in a form for submission to the voters five months hence.

The proposal was introduced by Commissioner Harry Irvine, but Mayor George W. Legge opposed the move, saying he thought it ill-advised until there was a settlement concerning a reduction in rates being charged by the Potomac Edison Co.

Commissioners Harry W. Mathaney and Edgar Reynolds joined Irvine in favoring the proposal, while Mayor Legge and Commissioner Martin M. Connelly voted against it.

Virginia's Capitol Square

Goal of Dr. Riggin, Health Commissioner, Is to Place Entire State Under Care of Adequately Trained and Equipped Officers.

(This is the first of a new series describing the functions and activities of the State Health Department.)

By Warren A. McNeill.
(Associated Press Staff Writer).

Richmond, Va., Feb. 1.—Placing the entire State of Virginia under the care of adequately trained and equipped local health officers is the next great goal foreseen by Dr. I. C. Riggin, State health commissioner.

The State health department, which he heads, has its headquarters on the sixth floor of the State Office Building, overflows onto the seventh floor and operates also through a supervisory field force and a number of State-controlled local units.

One regional office, which although subsidiary to the central department is able to take care of many of the needs of southeastern Virginia without the delay necessary for referral to the Richmond office, also has been set up recently at Abingdon with Dr. E. C. Harper in charge.

Functions already undertaken by the department, as its duties have been expanded by successive legislation, are varied, ranging from direct work for child health, public health nursing, control of communicable diseases and compiling of vital statistics through supervisory duties toward local health units and sanitoria and including advisory services in such matters as sanitary engineering.

Dr. Riggin's Chief Aim.

But it is the furnishing of citizens throughout Virginia with a public health service similar to that already enjoyed by cities and by a number of the counties that now engages the chief interest of Dr. Riggin as he looks toward the future, he said today.

Every city in Virginia has a public health officer whose duty it is to guard the health of the citizens and supervise the rendering of whatever services to this end the local government may authorize.

Already 30 counties in the State, grouped in 13 administrative units, have set up their own health services, with the aid of State funds and supervision and funds from the Federal Government. Approximately a dozen more counties now have this move under consideration and lack of funds is the chief bar to a more rapid expansion, Dr. Riggin says.

Consideration of Units.

The State health department, the commissioner points out, led the way in persuading counties to consolidate for the performance of certain functions and the public health units were the results. This plan was advocated in the cases of counties not large enough to afford the exclusive services of a full-time health officer.

The same principle has been applied by the department of public welfare in sponsoring almshouse consolidation and in a little different way by the department of education in placing more than one county under a single district superintendent of schools.

The health department's regional office at Abingdon is not classed with the local health units and, as a matter of fact, southwestern Virginia, along with the south side and upper valley are the sections of the State in which most of the existing units are in operation.

Value of Placing Aids.

Dr. Riggin pointed out, however, that in the case of a threatened serious outbreak of some disease in the southwest, which is the part of the State most remote from Richmond, it had been necessary in the past to send health officials out there, paying their transportation and living expenses, and that having workers regularly assigned to that section report to Richmond as their headquarters also was more expensive than centering them around a regional office.

Although in operation for only a short time, the Abingdon office already has brought high commendation from physicians in that region, Dr. Riggin said.

He pointed out that this is in no sense a "branch office," and that all health records and statistics still are compiled and kept at Richmond, giving a picture here of conditions in the State as a whole, although the Abingdon office keeps copies of its reports and has a similarly complete picture there of the southwestern region.

The next article of this series, to be published by The Post on Tuesday, tells of the work of the Bureau of Vital Statistics in the State Health Department.

Sing a Song of Compromise

Debate Over State Air for Maryland Leads Legislator to Promise One Acceptable to All; Mrs. Stevens' Anthem Urged.

By E. F. Tingley
(Staff Correspondent of The Post.)

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 1.—Following introduction today in the House of Delegates of a third bill officially designating the Maryland State song, Delegate John S. White (Democrat), Prince Georges County, announced he shortly would bring before the Legislature a compromise song intended to please all parties.

Delegate Joseph A. Cantrel (Fusion), Montgomery County, filed a bill today which would make the song entitled "Maryland State Song" the official anthem of the State. He said it was written by Mrs. Eugene E. Stevens, of Chevy Chase (Md.), in 1931, with the thought that it was more in keeping with the trend of modern times and typifying Maryland ideals; namely, an atmosphere of peace and tranquillity, as opposed to the "gore and warlike thrusts" of the original song.

The words follow:

"Thy beauty lives for evermore,
Maryland, My Maryland,
From Garrett's Hills to Eastern Shore,
Maryland, My Maryland.

"Remember Calvert's tolerant rule,
His aim for Church, for State, for School,
So let justice be our rule,
Maryland, My Maryland.

"Thy heroes make a shining list,
Maryland, My Maryland,
And Margaret Brent, first Feminist,
Maryland, My Maryland.

"Forget not Carroll's noble creed,
Forget not Howard's manly breed,
And all that rallied to thy need,
Maryland, My Maryland.

"Thy lofty aims must never fail,
Maryland, My Maryland,
Thy gleaming banner never trail,
Maryland, My Maryland.

"For God and State, for hearth and home,
For honor, courage, truth enthroned,
We'll stand, wherever we may roam,
Maryland, My Maryland."

Previously, efforts had been made to establish two other songs the official State anthem. Early in the session duplicate bills were introduced by Senator J. Allan Coad (Democrat), St. Marys County, and Delegate Charles Carroll (Democrat), Howard County, to have the song, "Maryland, My Maryland," written by James Ryder Randall in 1861, made official. This starts with the words, "The despot's heel is on thy shore, Maryland, my Maryland," and continues for ten stirring stanzas. This is the best-known song in the Free State.

Delegate Thomas L. Popp (Republican), Allegany County, later introduced a bill making the State song one written by Thomas T. White, former superintendent of schools of Allegany County. This is only four stanzas in length and starts with the words, "We dedicate our song to thee, Maryland, my Maryland." Popp said the song is popular in western Maryland.

Delegate White, who became known in the campaign as "the singing legislator," and famous for his rendition of "Irish Eyes Are Smiling" and other songs of old Erin, says it is about time the air was cleared and plans to compose a song with the same tune as all the others, but which blends the spirit of militarism and peace. He hopes to satisfy every one with the new stanzas.

'Green Bag' Of Nice Soon To Give Jobs

350 Positions Will Be Filled in Area of Hagerstown.

Party Workers Await Early Revelation of Patronage.

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—With approximately 350 jobs available in Washington County as a result of the victory of a Republican Governor in Maryland, party workers here are waiting anxiously for the opening of the "green bag" of Gov. Harry Nice.

Washington County Republican leaders expect also to share in the vacancies in State offices in view of the more than 3,000 majority given the Republican gubernatorial candidate in a county has had an affiliated Democratic majority of approximately 2,000.

It has been reported that a Washington Countian will probably receive the post as State game warden, Lancelot Jacques, of Smithsburg, one of the original Nice supporters in western Maryland, being prominently mentioned.

Washington County Republicans also are hopeful of obtaining one of the posts of the State roads commission, the State industrial accident commission and the State insurance commission.

Besides the State posts that will become vacant shortly, two new magistrates and a juvenile court judge will be appointed, as well as justices of peace in Williamsport, Hancock, Clearspring, Boonsboro and Smithsburg. Because it has been the custom to name an attorney to one of the magistrate posts here, Samuel C. Strite, local attorney, has been prominently mentioned, while C. Welles Little, George D. Hicks and Robert Brindle, all local attorneys, have been mentioned for the Juvenile Court. Edward Heard, former judge of the Orphans' Court, is mentioned for the other local magistrate position here.

A new board of election supervisors will also be named, as well as registrars in each of the 45 precincts in the city and county.

Gov. Nice indicated that despite the fact the majority of the members of the Republican State central committee supported Senator Phillips Lee Goldsborough in the primary, he will act favorably upon the committee's recommendations on patronage.

Dr. H. E. Tabler, Hancock, Nice leader in Washington County in the primary, is expected to receive one of the State posts if he wants it.

Mr. and Mrs. Hicks became ill after preparing rabbits for cooking.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Hicks is survived by two sons and two daughters. Burial will be at Kingsport, Tenn.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

IN THE language of Mr. Tom Kearney, of St. Louis, if you incline to the theory that Washington will win the 1935 American League pennant, one odllar will get you eight, which is his quaint way of saying that the Nats are currently quoted as an 8-to-1 shot.

There has been talk that when Mr. Hernando De Soto happened upon the Mississippi River back in 1541 and claimed the territory in the name of Spain, he not only discovered the river but discerned on its banks, at a point which is now St. Louis, Mr. Kearney laying the Redskins current odds on the corn crop, but I doubt that.

Anyway, Mr. Kearney has been making book on the banks of the Mississippi for a long, long time, and apparently with great success. He has parlayed a ramshackle cigar stand situated up an alley into a considerable chunk of downtown St. Louis real estate holdings. So, when Mr. Kearney begins quoting odds, his figures command moret han a modicum of respect.

Insp orts jargon, they say "you pays your money and you takes your choice," and it's Mr. Kearney's business to bet you are wrong—at his odds. Thus, when Mr. Kearney says he considers the Nats no more than an 8-to-1 shot and, moreover, backs his opinion with the coin of the realm, you may concede that they are rated no worse than 8 to 1.

NOTHING has occurred during the winter season, apparently, to sake Mr. Kearney's conviction that the Tigers and the Cardinals are, indeed, the best clubs in their respective leagues. Posting hirs first odds of the year, the Sage of the Mississippi rates the 1934 champions of each league as the favorites to repeat in the 1935 race.

And it no home-town pride that has caused Kearney to lay only even money against the Cardinals' chances to repeat. Long ago he learned to dispense with civic pride wherein betting is involved and his short price against the Cardinals apparently is the result of his honest conviction that they are far and away the best club in the league.

Inc ontrast to the even money quotations on the Cards, Kearney is laying 3to 2 against the chance that the Tigers will repeat in 1935. He rates the New York Yankees and the Indians close up. Two dollars will get you five if you care to bet on the Yanks and one dollar will get you three if youliketheIndians to win the pennant.

Kearney has greeted the Red Sox's Cronin trade with the announcement that he will lay 4 to 1 against Boston winning the pennant. The long shots of the American league race are the Athletics, at 20 to 1, and the White Sox and Browns, at 40 to 1. One dollar will get you three if you thinktheGiants will win the National League flag. With Mr. Kearney, you can have the same price on the Chicago Cub.

SPEAKING of odds, this department was quiet intrigued by a treatise on the subject which came to hand from Collyer's Eye, the little green-and-white sporting publication which sometimes wanders far afield. It holds up Lloyd's, of London, as the supreme authority on odds, and points out that the British agency will offer no more than 8 to 1 against the chances that Father Coughlin will some day be elected President of the United States.

The vagaries of odds was illustrated, it was written, by the election of Franklin D. Roosevelt to the White House, despite the fact that on the day he was born he was a 50,000,000-to-1 shot to attain the presidency. Mr. Collyer's commentator inquiries: "Just what are the legitimate odds in the ordinary happenings of life?

Less than 20 years ago the world was engaged in the greatest of wars to make the world "safe for democracy," yet that war bred such consummate dictators as Hitler, Stalin and Mussolini. You could have written your own odds against such a finale to the slaughter of 10,000,000 men in the "War for Democracy."

When Is a Singer a Yodeler? Anytime, to Win an Argument

By Paul Gallico.

GARNISCH-PARTENKIRCHEN, (By Mail).—This department has done considerable research work on European sport, with an especial analytical eye on the Olympic material and timber, and has never really been worried or has viewed with alarm until the other evening when I was asked what about our Olympic yodeling team. Naturally on the defensive, I said, "Well, what about our Olympic yodeling team?" and so they inquired, "Well, is it a good one? Can it compare with our world's championship yodeling meisterschaft?" Naturally, a patriotic American citizen, I did not wish to admit that I had never heard of the Olympic yodeling championships, so I merely admitted modestly that we had the best yodeling team in the world and let it go at that. Or, at least I hoped that that would end the argument.

Just then the boys with the zithers and guitars struck up a gay lilting tune, and a rather nice looking young chap got up and did some strange and very fascinating things with his voice. The gentleman at our table said: "Aha! You hear? That is Sepl Grubmaier, our singles yodeler. He is the national singles yodeling champion of Bavaria and will be the No. 1 yodeler on the Olympic team. Who is your No. 1 singles yodeler?"

Some Fast Thinking.

You must admit that there was a spot where I had to do a little fast thinking. I must also tell you that after a couple of liters of double bock beer with a chaser of weisbeer with lemon, that one does not ordinarily think very rapidly. But I think that I rose magnificently to the occasion. "Bing Crosby," I said. "Ach!" said the gentleman, "Ping Crosby? I haff not heard off him. He yodels goot?" I replied after him: "Does he yodel good, wait until you get a load of Bing yodeling 'May I' and 'When the Blue of the Night Meets the Gold of the Day,' 'Some One Waits for Me.'" The gentleman looked puzzled. "Ach, so," he said, "He will yodel dass in the Olmpics?" It seemed that I was in for it. I said: "You bet he will if I have anything to do with it." I must find out as soon as I get home who is on the Olympic yodeling

Baer's Girl Friend Waves at Carnera

Miami, Feb. 1 (U.P.). — Primo Carnera and the girl who might one day be Mrs. Max Baer met in a garden of palms today.

When Mary Kirk Brown, of New York and Atlanta, spied the towering former heavyweight champion, she ran through the tropical garden and waved a greeting. Carnera smiled, and extended a giant hand.

They talked for a few minutes in the garden where Baer recently said, "it might be true," in discussing a rumor that he planned to marry Miss Brown.

Before Miss Brown could tell Carnera her impressions of Max Baer, the wooer, and before Carnera could describe Max Baer, the fighter, cameramen gathered, to frighten the girl away.

Gaithersburg Winner; Reed Shoots 30 Points

Scoring 15 times from the floor for a total of 30 points, Howard Reed, veteran Gaithersburg High forward, set a new record for individual scoring in the Montgomery County League yesterday, leading his team to a 57-10 victory over Poolesville.

Reed played but three full quarters, substitutes dotting the lineup after the hosts clinched the game and secured undisputed possession of third place in the county league.

Contests on Road For Massanutten

Court, Swimming and Rifle Teams Are Active.

Woodstock, Va., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—Massanutten Military Academy athletic teams are facing opponents in foreign territory in three sports this week-end.

Today, the basket ball team played Woodberry Forest School at Orange, Va., and tomorrow afternoon meets the Navy Plebes at Annapolis. From there it continues to Pittsburgh, where it will meet the California, Pa., American Legion team and New Kensington (Pa.) High on Tuesday and Shadyside Academy, of Pittsburgh, on Wednesday night.

The swimming team met Baltimore City College tonight and opposes Western High School, of Washington, tomorrow night. The rifle team faces the Stanton Military Academy riflemen tomorrow at Staunton.

D. C. Colleges Face 4 Foes In Ring

Columbus Fight M.I.T.; American and Hampden-Sydney to Clash.

PROFESSIONAL beak-busting may be on its last legs in the District, but that strapping, lusty youngster, college boxing, is just beginning to walk, if today's sports calendar is any criterion of what the future holds in store.

Catholic University's mittmen engage Duke at Brookland; Columbus faces Massachusetts Institute of Technology at Tech High School; Maryland squares off with Washington and Lee at College Park and American University, a newcomer to the ranks, meets Randolph-Macon at American University.

With the "M" Club banquet and Maryland-Virginia bastket ball game rounding out the program, it shapes up as one of the brightest, busiest of the current social season.

C. U. Is Underdog.

The greatest interest, if advance ticket sales gauge the public's interest, centers around Catholic U.'s attempt to stop one of the Southern Conference's outstanding glove teams, and the odds are against the Cardinals. Undefeated in three matches, with a trio of undefeated men as the bulwark of the team, Duke seems to be too smooth for the ambitious Brooklanders.

Catholic will not succumb without throwing a few punches, however. Red Fleming, Capt. Ed Thibideau and Angy Restaino seem to carry most of the home team's hopes for winning, and if they deliver it is not entirely amiss to believe the Redbirds can poke and punch their way into a tie at least.

Columbus Returns to Ring.

Columbus returns to the ring after two years of inactivity because of the lack of a suitable place for staging the bouts. Tutored by Bobby Goldstein, former Southern Conference featherweight champion, the "Skippers" are in fine fettle and rated on par with the visiting aggregation.

Included in the Columbus lineup will be several boxers who have earned their spurs in amateur competition. Leon Shub, former Central High School star, will appear in the 135-pound role, while Bobby Schwartz, brother of Alexandria's famed "Baker Boy" Bill, is scheduled to fight in the 175-pound class.

Maryland Boxers Favorites.

Maryland is favored over Washington and Lee in boxing, but the Terps may have all they can handle in Virginia's courtmen. It will be the Generals' first boxing match of the season, but the Cavalier basketers are just beginning to hit their stride, after getting off to a poor start.

The Terrapins rank as one of the outstanding boxing teams in the Southern Conference — Duke and Virginia and Maryland constitute the first three—and after wading through V. M. I. and Richmond without having to extend themselves, should win handily.

Maryland's "M" Club starts the triple-header on its way with approximately 300 old grads and members of the '34 football squad programmed to battle some fried chickens. The odds are all in favor of the old grads, and the contest is confidentially understood to be in the bag.

Twenty members of the team will receive their letters, which will be presented by Maj. L. M. Silvester, president of the club. The feasting gets under way at 6:30 o'clock and all guests will adjourn immediately after to witness the athletic events.

American Squad Hard Hit.

American University's first boxing squad has been hit hard by scholastic ineligibility, but Joe Carlo, its student-coach, predicts an interesting match this afternoon. Carlo himself will do battle in the light heavyweight class.

The Eagles' most prominent pointwinners are "Whitey" Bransom, 145-pounder, and Wade Hansborough, 155-pounds. Jack Simms, 135-pounder, showed lots of promise in trials for team positions, but has since been declared ineligible.

Hampden-Sydney will be led by Keeno Harshbarger and "Dopsey" Dotson, both football men. Although the sport is new to the Tigers also, they reputedly have a well-knit team. The match goes on at 3:15 o'clock and the public is invited.

Ellis Is Added to W. & L. List of Injury Victims

Lexington, Va., Feb. 1 (AP).—Bill Ellis, a guard on the Washington and Lee University basket ball team, was declared out of the lineup today due to a pulled leg tendon. Another General on the shelf is Capt. Charlie Smith, all-Southern center.

Smith is suffering from a heavy cold and will be unable to make the trip to Duke with the squad. Ellis will be out for some time.

Ellerslie Cardinals Reorganized for 1935

Ellerslie, Md., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—The Ellerslie Cardinals, champions of the Potomac Valley Baseball League in 1934, have reorganized for the coming season by reelecting Hugh Stevenson, president; D. C. Imler, secretary, and Frank Burkett, treasurer.

The board of directors for the 1935 season is composed of H. T. Lowery, B. F. Woods, Samuel Leydig, Roy Clites, J. V. Porter, O. C. Wolfe, A. C. Chatain, Otis Waltman and Stanley Daniels.

D. C. Boy Leads Massanutten Against Western Swimmers

Visitors Are Favorites to Win in Tank Battle Here Tonight.

WHEN Western High meets the strong Massanutten Military Academy swimming team, of Woodstock, Va., tonight in the Y. M. C. A. pool, the Washington boys will be matching strokes with another Washington boy, Eugene Chandler, the cadets' ace free-style sprinter.

Sixteen-year-old Chandler, son of Mrs. F. C. Chandler, 4550 Connecticut avenue, and a graduate of Stewart Junior High School, took up swimming as a pastime when he went to Massanutten. Coach Les Fouts, leader of Massanutten's South Atlantic championship acquatic team, watched the youngster and hastily recruited him for competitive action.

25 Seconds Flat.

Since then, Chandler has developed fast and has hit 25 seconds flat for the short course 7-yard free-style and nearly 26 for the longer tanks. The 50 is his speciality. Tonight he swims against Capt. Ham Dorman, of Western, and Gene Reinburg. Last night he took part in Massanutten's clash with Baltimore City College.

Western goes into the meet considerably less than an even choice, but Coach Dallas Shirley, banking especially on Reniburg and Dorman, Lew Clay and J. B. Bonham in the breast stroke. Andy Moynello and Dorsey in the back stroke and Forrest Harding in the diving is not conceding the visitors a big margin of victory. The meet starts at 6:30 o'clock.

Johnston Jinx Continues as Bout Is Off

By Edward J. Neil.

NEW YORK, Feb. 1 (AP).—Art Lasky, Minneapolis heavyweight contender, and Jimmy Braddock, of Jersey City, aren't fighting tonight in Madison Square Garden after all, and if you know an A-1 guaranteed hex hunter with a record please communicate with James Johnston.

Johnston is the matchmaker at the Garden, and while he isn't a man to be first off a sinking ship, it wouldn't be wise to bet that he wouldn't place or at least show.

"The place is haunted," he muttered. "Pay me up to May 31 and I'll march out of here right now."

Lasky Has Influenza.

Lasky, one of the four ranking contenders for Max Baer's heavyweight title, came down with influenza and a fever of 102 degrees just as the Garden, harassed by battles with the New York State Athletic Commission, a previous cancellation of the same kind within three weeks, bad decisions, and steadily diminishing boxing gates for the past two years, looked happily toward a temporary revival.

Tonight's advance sale indicated a $30,000 gate, the fight promised to be a pleasing punching duel, and the combination might easily have swayed the Garden board of directors, headed by Col. John S. Hammond, who meet Tuesday to decide whether the Garden shall continue promoting boxing or lease the privilege to outsiders, even the thought of which must be disturb-

Canzoneri Is Signed; Promoters Seek Ross

Chicago, Feb. 1 (AP).—Tony Canzoneri was signed today for another chance at the world lightweight title, and the holder of the crown, Barney Ross, is willing. However, it will take some maneuvering to get them together.

Canzoneri signed up with Promoters Nate Lewis and Jim Mullen for a 15-round title bout in the Chicago Stadium, April 12 or 26. Lewis and Mullen, however, have possession of only half the project, in spite of Ross' willingness, for the champion is committed to fight his next defense of the title for Promoter Joe Foley.

S. Conference Acts to Add Members

Committee Is Named to Recommend Six Institutions.

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 1 (AP).—A committee of four to make initial recommendations for membership in the Southern Conference, which has increased its maximum limit from 10 to 16 schools, was announced today by Forrest Fletcher, conference president.

Members of the committee are Prof. Charles Nash, University of Virginia; H. C. Byrd, University of Maryland; R. K. Foster, South Carolina, and Dean Wanamaker, Duke University. Their recommendations will have to be passed on by the conference executive committee, also consisting of four members, before a new college can be admitted.

It was pointed out that this meant the sanction of eight of the ten conference schools would be required.

Sees "No Difficulty."

In a long-distance conversation from Washington and Lee University, Mr. Fletcher said he had mailed letters to each of the four appointees, asking them to serve. He said he had not received their acceptances yet, but added that he anticipated "no difficulty."

Explaining the enlargement of the committee to four members, President Fletcher said this was done to give a voice on the group to each section of the conference.

"I have made it clear to the group," he continued, "that they are to make recommendations on any addition they see it. Their views will be acted upon by the executive committee, which annually meets in September. This committee, in turn, transmits its findings to the entire conference, where the final vote is taken."

William and Mary and Richmond, in Virginia; the Citaldel, Furman and Presbyterian, in South Carolina, and Davidson and Wake Forest, in North Carolina, have been the most persistent seekers after conference membership, although Centre in Kentucky has indicated that it might be eager to be another plum in the conference pudding.

Little Generals Rally, Defeat Fredericksburg

Fredericksburg, Va., Feb. 1 (Spl.). Washington and Lee High School's Little Generals, of Clarendon, proved themselves quite too big for the Fredericksburg High School basketeers tonight, defeating them, 23 to 20, in one of the most exciting contests ever witnessed here.

Leading 15 to 4 at the half, Fredericksburg was unable to keep up with the Clarendon lads in the two final periods and dropped a heartbreaker as Cooper, of Washington and Lee, suddenly started a scoring spree.

Capital Sandlotter to Learn Of Trip With Nats Tomorrow

THERE will be joy in the household of a Washington sandlotter tomorrow when he will awaken to find his dream come true.

He will be launched upon a big league baseball career with the announcement by The Washington Post of its selection of the sandlot player who will be sent to the Nats' Southern training camp, with all traveling and hotel expenses to be borne by The Post.

At Biloxi, Miss., he will live the life of a big leaguer, with a Washington contract awaiting him if he justifies the faith of the selection committee of The Washington Post Sandlot Baseball Association, which will choose him as the local youth best fitted for a big-league career.

One in a Thousand.

He will be the lad selected from among approximately 1,000 sandlotters who competed on one of the 90 teams in the 15 leagues of The Washington Post Baseball Association last summer. He may be a pitcher, catcher, infielder or outfielder. The qualifications of scores of players are still being sifted.

When the main body of Nats leaves for the training site hard by the Gulf of Mexico on February 23, he will be one of them—his baseball future in his own hands.

Few have been the sandlotters who have made the long hop direct from the lots to the big leagues, but there is always the long chance. A berth in organized baseball, however, is almost a certainty for the lad selected.

With the Washington Club expanding its "farm" system to include teams in leagues of virtually every classification, the youth named by The Post has an excellent chance to earn a contract with a club in the Washington system.

Seek Native Talent.

Eager to develop native talent for their club, Owner Clark Griffith and Manager Bucky Harris are cooperating with The Post to the fullest extent. At Biloxi, the lad namcd will be given the individual attention of both Harris and Griffith. His try-out will be thorough.

Tomorrow morning, when The Post announces its selection, his dream will, indeed, have come true.

Veteran Star Cards 67 To Lead

Revolta's 66 Is Best Score of Day in $6,500 Event.

Even at that, Smith's was not the best card of the day. John Revolta, of Milwaukee, breezed in with a 66, four under perfect figures.

Thirteen Subdue Par.

Thirteen players took advantage of the warm day and perfect playing conditions to earn a decision over par, but even at this, there were some, including Olin Dutra, national open champion, who had their troubles.

Trailing Smith in second place were four players: Ray Mangrum, Los Angeles; Lex Robson, Toronto; Jimmy Hines, Long Island, and Harry Cooper, Chicago, with totals of 140, even par.

In a six-way tie for sixth were Revolta, Les Madison, Hollywood; Al Zimmerman, Portland, Oreg.; Horton Smith, Oak Park, Ill.; Ky Laffoon, Chicago, and Jack Gaines, Glendale amateur.

Sarazen Has 142.

Seven others were tied at 142, including Gene Sarazen, former national open champion; Denny Shute, former British open champion; Henry Picard, North-South titleholder, and Charles Guest, leader at the end of the first round.

Guest, who shot the course in 66 yesterday, needed 10 strokes more today to get around the long, narrow fairways.

Dutra Needs an 81.

The case of Dutra was even more pathetic. After taking 71 on the first round, the reigning open champion put in a wild afternoon, and wound up with 81 strokes, as he shot from rough to trap and back again. When that score trickled into the locker room, there was considerable buzzing of voices. Hagen rose to remark:

"It can't be true. No one could take that many strokes on that course. No one could shoot worse than a 74. I know. That's what I had."

Colonials Beat Villanova, 33 to 29

Bill Noonan's Late Goals Provide G. W. With Needed Punch.

VILLANOVA, Pa., Feb. 1 (Spl.). Big Bill Noonan, lanky Washington sharpshooter, put the punch in a sorely pressed George Washington U. five here tonight, scoring two field goals in the last five minutes to pull his team to victory over a strong Villanova club, 33 to 29.

When willowy Will shot into the fray matters stood, 25-24, with Villanova staging what looked like an unstoppable scoring rampage after trailing from the start. The tall substitute, who earlier in the season helped George Washington to score victories over C. C. N. Y. and Emory-Henry, added muchneeded speed to a triing Colonial five.

Then Hal Kiesel, whose tipping at center and general play featured throughout, sank a foul and a goal from under on a great banck-hand pass from Noonan to lengthen G. W. U.'s margin to 30124.

Scores Clinching Goal.

At this stage Tom Ryan holed a marathon toss and the Wildcats again seemed ready to claw the D. C. lads to pieces in the waning moments. But Kiesel again negotiated a free throw, and finally Noonan, in a sensational follow-up from a mad scramble of players, sent the game-clinching goal through the net with but 15 seconds to go. It mattered little that Jack Shevlin made a goal and a foul as the gun sounded.

Villanova previously had won seven out of eight games.

Cardinals Drop Plans For Contests in Cuba

St. Louis, Feb. 1 (AP).—Start of spring training by the Champion St. Louis Cardinals has been postponed from February 26 until March 4 or 5, as the result of cancellation of plans for two spring exhibition games in Cuba.

President Sam Breadon said today the Cuban trip has been called off largely because of "uncertain" conditions in the islands. The Cards will train at Bradenton, Fla.

McGehee's Headin' Home Takes Tropical Park Feature

Gelding Wins By Head to Repeat

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Writer.)

HIALEAH PARK, Miami, Feb. 1. That snow and ice and the stinging winter winds at his home in Berryvale, Va., are not the only reasons why Owner E. McGehee is enjoying his stay at this tropical race track. McGehee shipped three horses to Florida in charge of Trainer J. Everman and if the trio continues to perform as it has to date, he will ship three carloads of ready cash North before another spring comes over the Blue Ridge Mountains.

In seven starts, McGehee's horses have never been worse than second and he has five victories to his credit. Headin' Home, which today won the first division of the featured Everglades purse, previously had triumphed once and was second in another race. Purple Knight has a victory and a second to his credit and Erin Lad won his only start.

The three horses are eligible for the $5,000 Florida Derby on March 9, and McGehee is almost certain to have one starter.

Derby Candidates Bow.

It was a field of Derby candidates that Headin' Home defeated today. Jockey Wayne Wright had to ride the gelding to the limit to win by a head from the fast closing Cristate. Elwawa was third.

Headin' Home broke on top of the field and was never headed. Elwawa and the favored Stegal were closest in pursuit along the back stretch, with Cristate shuffled back to fifth place. Headin' Home forced Elwawa to tire, but Cristate rushed down the stretch and just missed taking the decision.

Dowdy Dell drove to victory in the second division of the Everglades and paid $7.40, the same figure shown on Headin' Home. Lee Rosenberg's filly came from behind to stage a finish that proved too much for Hardware and Dokas. Foxy Agnes was installed the favorite, but Jockey Winters appeared to pull up following the break and she was never a serious factor.

Pair of Long Shots.

Those with hunches on No. 5 post position made a small fortune on the first three races, when horses breaking from that stall came romping home at long prices. Autumn Leaves began the parade in the day's opener, defeating a field of 14 frisky juveniles to pay $11. Gay Crest upset the pre-race dope in the second, scoring in decisive fashion at a $74.30 mutuel and Postscript won the third for a $69.70 for a $2 ticket.

Postscript was ridden by Carl Hanford and it was the first victory for him since he returned to action here this week. Hanford was injured last fall at Pimlico, a few yards from where his brother, Buddy, was killed. Hanford rode a perfect race on a horse which the Jersey Stable did not believe would win the race.

Miss Careful led Easy Sailing and Beaver Dam across the finish line in the sixth while Foxland Hall made every post a winning one in the final over the mile and a quarter course.

Black Stockings Wins 2d Straight

Spurts in Stretch to Beat Pulis by a Neck.

In winning his second straight race in as many starts this year, this seven-year-old gelding, out of the money only nine times in 34 races in 1934, trailed the pace for the greater part of the distance. He challenged in the stretch and with a great finish just managed to beat A. G. Tarn's Pulis, the early pacemaker, by a neck. Six Bells was third in the field of six.

Well backed, Black Stockings paid $8.40 straight.

At the Post . . .

Dear Al: Hialeah Park, Miami, Fla., Feb. 1.

Jockey Silvio Coucci arrived at this track from Santa Anita, where he went to ride Twenty Grand, which was withdrawn from the $100,000 classic. Coucci will start riding Monday, and if he's in anything like the form he showed at Bowie last fall, you can make him the best bet in your book. Gilbert and Meade are hardly doing enough to keep warm. Wayne Wright is in good form, but there is not a real stand-out boy on the grounds. Here's a tip for you: The Bradley horses are being brought along slowly, and I'm expecting a shower of winners to come from this stable. Something along the line of that series of killings at Laurel last fall. Clocker Mike and Trainer Joe returned to their normal ages today. Now I'll try to do something about that foot race around the track. Jockey No Boy Jacobs is still singing the blues.

BILL.

First race — Grog displayed a world of speed in graduating yesterday and appears ready to make it two in a row. She meets formidable opposition and must not make mistakes. Stout will do the riding again. Hi-Nellie is a sharp miss and should be close. Clapping Jane to hold the others safe.

Second race—Band Wagon, sold yesterday by Chester Bild, of Washington, to Benny Creech, finds a field that should serve the purposes of the new owner. This has been a hard luck horse, but he should beat Merrily On and Ladfield.

Third race — Marching Home comes off a convincing effort and I would not be surprised to see him repeat. Gets in with only steadying weight and Litzenberger to do the riding. Hasty Glance came from far back last out to run third and is dangerous. Clocker Mike is expecting a wake-up from Corinne Dailey real soon.

Fourth race — Chastity has been whispered to me as a real good thing in this race. Trials and races show this one to be fit. I'm making it the best bet. Brindle at the lightweight will be up there battling at the finish. Sang Froid is dangerous.

Fifth race — Larranaga is the same horse which won impressively here the other day. Picks up top weight tomorrow, but is used to it. A good ride is all that is needed. New Deal was out for an airing last time. Hug Again and Stand Pat are prominent contenders.

Sixth race—Shot and Shell won his last over the turf course and finds conditions about the same for this. Cousin George had little chance in that recent effort, suffering poor racing luck. Kindacorn, claimed out of that last, can not be disregarded.

Seventh race—Infinitate is ready to upset a field of this caliber. Has worked splendidly and I want to see Jockey Rainey do some booting. Hoops and Wise Advocate for the remainder.

DOVE OF PEACE had plenty of early speed, but weakened badly. LUCKY TURN ran a fair race. MANTADOS broke very fast, but dropped far out of it and never was a contender. POSTSCRIPT was kept on the extreme outside all the way, came with a good burst of speed in stretch, and was drawing away at end. LUXURO was carried very wide on turn and ran good race under weak handling. RIDGE MOR was sent to the front with a rush, showed good speed, but weakened in final furlong. DESERT CALL had no mishap. FREDRICK stopped fast. CANDESCENT closed a big gap.

ELWAWA was hard ridden all the way, but just could not get up. STEGAL moved up fast turning out of back stretch, but stopped badly in final furlong. His race was below his true form. UNKNOWN SOLDIER showed fine effort. ENTHUSIASM was never a contender.

BOSTON BROOK had plenty of speed, but stopped badly. He is sure to improve. FOXY AGNES ran a miserable race. She lacked speed and never closed any ground. SUN IDOL showed flash of early speed. ## Reinstatement Of Rifle Tests Is Sought

Association Meets Here, Decides to Request Congress Action.

FOLLOWING a brief discussion by Gen. M. A. Reckord, executive vice president of the National Rifle Association, the directors of that organization, meeting in their annual session at the Mayflower Hotel, yesterday adopted a resolution instructing their officers to present to Congress a request to reinstate the national rifle matches.

Gen. Reckord pointed out that although the basic law is mandatory in respect to the annual conduct of these matches, they were discontinued in 1932 because of the need for economy in the regular budget. It is now felt, however, that they should be restored in order that the work of instruction carried on by this university of marksmanship might be picked up where it left off three years ago.

In Line With Program.

According to Gen. Reckord, 25,280 entries were received during the last national matches held in 1931. The total population at the camp was 6,000, 4,000 of whom were civilians or members of the National Guard, who were there to receive the benefits of training in the small arms firing school. Police of 28 cities were represented in the police section where they received a course of training which qualified them as instructors in the use of firearms, offensive gas and jiu-jutsu. Since the Attorney General's recent crime conference there has been a growing demand for a superior police school which would offer instruction in these and other problems of law enforcement.

By John R. Vosburgh.

EASTERN HIGH presented itself with the interhigh basket ball championship, to all intents and purposes, yesterday, by knocking off Western, its last surviving rival for the title, with the devastating finish of a true champion, 29 to 23.

It was the second straight championship which Eastern all but assured itself, for the Lincoln Parkers can still lose to Tech and win the crown since the chances of Roosevelt beating Eastern are about as bright as a one-legged man's winning the Olympic marathon.

In the other interhigh game, Central and Roosevelt clinched fourth and last places respectively through the medium of a 32 to 19 conquest for Central. The game was played at Roosevelt, at 2 p. m., an hour and a half earlier than the customary time, in order to enable those interested to see Western make its bid for the title. Eastern and Western played on the Tech floor before a loudly-cheering, near-capacity throng of students.

Steady Uphill Climb.

The story of Eastern's victory is that of a steady, uphill climb of a team which knew it was of championship caliber, which knew it was going to win, and which knew that when the full route was finished, its calm, relentless drive would have it on top. For three-fourths of the game, Western fought the unbeaten champions better than even, tooth and nail, giving as good as taken, even a little better. At the end of the first period the Georgetowners were leading, 4-2, and at half time were out in front, 14-11.

But when the big test came in the final quarter, with the score 19-19 and ten minutes to play, Western faltered. Eastern, on the other hand, hit a faster, smoother pace, and by the time the final whistle blew was polishing off the Georgetowners in rapid-fire fashion with a masterful exhibition of fast scoring.

Shaner Scores Twice.

The storm broke suddenly and before the side-line sages were scarcely aware of it, big Buddy Shaner, Eastern center, playing with a lame ankle, had ankled his way around enough to score twice in a row and Eastern was leading, 23 to 19.

Young Joe Hanley, Western center, had held Shaner and Ed Miller, both Eastern centers, scoreless up to that point besides dumping in 10 points himself to cop the individual scoring honors for the day; but Shaner worked fast on a pivot play to get two of them back at the crucial moment and two more from a fast scrimmage under the basket a few seconds later.

Then Lavelle (Dope) Dean, Eastern captain and high-scoring star of the series, sank a basket and it appeared to be all over but the shouting. Dean, incidentally, was kept very effectively in the background by Capt. Phil Maloney, of Western, from start to finish, being held to 7 points, four less than anyone else has held him during the series.

Burns Goes Out.

Gerry Burns, a Western second-stringer who performed in first-string style throughout, buoyed Western hopes a trifle with a fast basket on a teammate's shot off the board and it was 25-21, but Burns went out on the next play when he fouled Dean. Dean sank the free shot and Chick Hollidge and Gay Edelin added insult to injury for Western by netting a basket apiece. In the final seconds, Bob Dodderidge, of Western found a flaw in the clockwork of Eastern's brilliant passing game and got loose to score the final points of the game.

Nine of Hanley's 10 points came in the first half and were the backbone of his team's half-time lead. Maloney, sharing the individual honors with Hanley, had tallied twice from the floor and Burns once from the foul line. Dean had managed to score twice despite Maloney's close coverage.

Going into the third period, Reds Scheible, Eastern guard, hit a brilliant scoring streak, netting three baskets in a row before Hanley sank a foul for 17-15, Eastern. Dodderidge tied it up, but Edelin got loose for a sleeper, for 19-17. Brennan tied it up again shortly before the end of the period.

Roosevelt put up a fairly good fight in its game with Central before the latter took its second victory of the season. Spiro Kolius led the Ruff Riders with 10 points and Capt. Charlie Nau, Central, with 11.

Mount Rainier Retains Lead In League

Subdues Bowie Five, 21-8; Hyattsville Defeats Laurel, 29-12.

MOUNT RAINIER and Hyattsville High Schools continued their battle to lead the Prince Georges County League by winning easy victories over Bowie and Laurel, respectively, yesterday.

The Mounties kept a full game between themselves and Hyattsville by rallying to win, 21 to 8, after Bowie led at half time 7-5. McCauley, Bowie forward, scored all but one of his team's points. The losers registered only 1 point in the final half. Scott, with 10 points, was high for the winners.

Hyattsville had Laurel by a 19-3 count at the half and, with substitutes manning the ship in the final chukker, coasted in, 29-12. Cain and Quantrille led the winners, while Kroop, who tallied 10 points, was outstanding for Laurel.

In the junior division Hyattsville trounced Laurel, 24-4, and Mount Rainier's game with Upper Marlboro was postponed until Monday. The Hyattsville-Mount Rainier girls game also was postponed until next week.

Horse Show Is Set.

Among the Hunters . . .

By M. W. Meier.

DESPITE headlines, nobody will know whether there will be an open or closed season on wild fowl next fall, until after the spring flights and a carefuly study of hatching results throughout the country and Canada.

The action of the twenty-first annual American Game Conference in turning thumbs down on the Audubon Societies' demands for a closed season and leaving final decision to the Biological Survey undoubtedly was a wise one. Not all the 800 delegates may have been satisfied, following a day of bitter debate, but none of them will forget J. N. Darling's dramatic, roof-raising utterance, "So help me God, men! As long as I am chief of the survey the game of this country will get a square deal!"

Now we will see one of the most intensive studies made of wild fowl that this country has ever known:

Conference Highlights.

Perhaps the most noteworthy development at the conference was passage of a resolution asking President Roosevelt to place all renewable resources of the country under control of a single Governmental agency.

We've believed in this for years. If game is legally the property of the "Commonwealth" as the statute books read, then it would be a splendid conservation measure to remove it forever from the political football status of today.

Another highlight was a resolution asking for a joint Canadian and American commission to work out a unified season on wildfowl.

Most people are aware that Canada signed a migratory wild fowl treaty act with us, but few people know that it is one-sided. We have a Federal shooting law that applies in all States and we have the smallest bag limits known. In Canada, however, every province sets its own bag limits and shooting seasons. They are far more liberal than we are and fair-minded sportsmen are demanding some readjustments.

Asked Appropriation.

Another resolution asked that Congress allow the survey an annual appropriation large enough for it to carry on game enforcement work without the present-day stinting. Many States dislike the survey acting as game wardens over their shooting and this dislike seems to be nicely reflected in recent appropriations.

Representative William M. Berlin, of Pennsylvania, recent introducer of a bill, H. R. 3993, which would close duck shooting for a year and provide $250,000 with which to enforce it and compensate through positions, guides and boatmen who might thusly suffer, defended his views at the conference.

Passage of such a bill would shear the Biological Survey and the Agriculture Department of all its present protective powers. It would give Congress one more precious resource to kick about. It would nullify present work on resting areas, public shooting grounds and what-not.

May Not Come Up.

We recently had a pleasant talk with Representative Berlin on his proposed bill. He assured us the measure probably would not come up at all and that he had largely introduced it to call the attention of other sportsmen to the duck situation. He does feel, however, that drastic action is necessary.

William M. Finley, famous Oregon naturalist, undoubtedly astounded many delegates as he did us over the radio by accusing the United States Reclamation Service of being responsible for the death of countless fledgling ducks and destruction of thousands of unhatched eggs last summer.

Grazing Rights Sold.

Although supposedly under the control of the Biological Survey, grazing and water rights in all Federal bird reservations are in reality handled by the Reclamation Service. During the drought last year, and right at a moment when the marshes were filled with nesting wild fowl, they calmly sold grazing rights in the famous Clear Lake and Klamath Lake Bird Refuges on the Pacific Coast.

Thousands of sheep and cattle were turned into the areas and speedily they trampled down everything to the utter destruction of wild life. The survey protested and so did Mr. Finley and other thinking sportsmen. They were advised that if the survey would compensate the Reclamation Service for lost revenues (25 cents an acre) that the practice would be stopped. The sum total they have made from this acreage rental over a period of ten years, according to Mr. Finley, is $9,000, or less than $1,000 per year.

Shepherdstown, W. Va., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—The Shepherdstown High quintet was defeated by Martinsburg High, 27 to 19, last night. The game was tied at the end of the first quarter, but Martinsburg took the lead early in the second and was never overtaken.

Bobsled Record Is Foreseen As U. S. Title Contenders Vie

LAKE PLACID, N. Y., Feb. 1 (AP).—This resort town echoed with the crackling of bobsled runners today as a dozen two-man sleds streaked down icy Mount Van Hovenberg in preparation for the national A. A. U. senior title races tomorrow and Sunday.

With warmer weather—about 10 degrees above zero, ideal for bobsledding—forecast for the week-end, the record of 1:57.68 for the mile and a half course appeared certain to be broken. There is a possibility of snow.

The home-town entry of Curtis and Hubert Stevens, holder of the present record on the treacherous mountain run, ruled the favorite as throngs of winter sports lovers from throughout the East and Canada began to arrive.

Well known in continental bob-racing circles, C. B. Holland, of London, will pilot a sled which is expecteed to offer the Stevens brothers their stiffest competition.

Also considered in the running are Hunter Goodrich, of Milwaukee, who raced here in 1931 and 1932; Gilbert Colgate, of New York, pilot of the winning two-man bob in the North American championships last winter; Charles Storring, of Keene Valley, winner of this year's novice races, and Ivan Brown, of the same place, who will defend his title at A. A. U. two-man championship steersman.

Venzke's Final Test at Mile DueTonight

Penn Runner Rated Back of Chief Rivals in Millrose Race.

By Jack Cuddy.

NEW YORK, Feb. 1 (U.P.).—It may be "the last mile" for Gene Venzke tomorrow night when Pennsylvania's dream runner responds to the gun in the Wanamaker classic of the Millrose games before 16,000 fans at Madison Square Garden.

Another defeat by Glenn Cunningham and Bill Bonthron, fastest milers of all time, is expected to convince Venzke that the flowing rhythm of his strides is more suited to the longer 3,000 and 5,000 meter distances.

Venzke's persistence in entering mile and 1,500-meter competitions has caused a breach in the previously cordial relations with him and America's Olympic coach, Lawson Robertson. For many months Robbie has been trying to pound into stubborn Gene that his long, track-eating strides will accomplish more over the longer distances where the stretch spurts are not so important as in the mile. Venzke lacks the final powerhouse kick of such milers as Bonthron and Cunningham.

Betting Is Even.

For nearly two indoor track sessons this picture runner failed to win any important races because he could not match the final, heart-lashing surge of Cunningham or Bonthron, or both. Lawson believes Venzke, who was the first to run the 4:10 indoor mile in 1932, is wasting his time when he should be grooming himself for the 5,000-meter event in the 1936 Olympic games.

Gene's poor showing against Cunningham, the Kansas flyer, last week in Boston indicates that he will have no chance tomorrow night when Cunningham and Bonthron renew their thrilling track feud. Betting is even on this sixth meeting between Bonthron, the erstwhile Princeton powerhouse, who holds the world outdoor 1,500-meter record of 3:48.8, and Cunningham, who holds the indoor 1,500-meter record of 3:52.2, the indoor mile record of 4:04.4 and the outdoor mile record of 4:06.7.

A new indoor mile record may be established tomorrow night when Cunningham tries to even the count with Blazing Bill, who now holds three decisions over Glenn in five meetings. The other three men in the race, Venzke, Eric Ny, of Sweden, European champion, and Bill Ray, of Manhattan College, are not expected to threaten Cunningham or Bonthron. Ny, who arrived a week ago, has not been in competition since last October, and he has been able to do little indoor training in Stockholm. Hence the first race of his 1935 campaign may not be so good. But later he may furnish the Americans with stiff opposition.

12 Events Slated For Navy Today

Varsity Teams to Appear in Seven Contests.

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—Naval Academy athletes today put final touches to preparations for the first of a series of banner cards of competition to be presented during the next several week-ends.

Twelve events, varsity teams appearing in seven, make up the card for tomorrow. Teams from Virginia institutions will furnish the opposition in half of the program.

Outstanding varsity contests will be basket ball with Pittsburgh, swimming with Virginia, and water polo with New York Athletic Club in the afternoon, and boxing with Richmond at night. Other events carded are: Varsity fencing, Penn.; wrestling, V. M. I.; small-bore rifle match, N. Y. U.; plebes, fencing, Penn.; freshmen water polo, Baltimore Y. M. C. A.; boxing, V. M. I.; freshmen basket ball, Massanutten Academy.

Illness of Lasky Postpones Battle

ing the deep sleep of the late Tex Rickard, who built the $5,000,000 corporation on boxing.

Lasky, examined by William Walker, commission physician, is not in serious condition, but there was no way of telling when he would be able to go through with the match.

Braddock Also 'Ill.'

Braddock, who recently whipped John Henry Lewis to spice a sturdy comeback campaign, visited Lasky in his hotel suite and it was difficult to tell which was the sicker. Braddock, though a 13-to-5 underdog, was certain he could knock Lasky out.

One day, before the fights scheduled two weeks ago tonight, Bob Olin, light heavyweight champion, was forced to withdraw from a non-title match with Lewis because of a toothache and worry over illness in his family which resulted a few days later in the death of his sister. That, too, promised to return a hearty gate.

Since then the Garden has quarreled with the commission heatedly over bad officiating, culminating in the reversal by the commission last Friday night of a decision awarded originally to Eddie (Babe) Risko over Vince Dundee, former middleweight champion.

At least four syndicates are ready to bid for the Garden boxing privilege. One offer is said to be a guarantee of $150,000, in addition to a rental of $3,500 a night for 20 indoor shows.

Games Postponed.

Three court contests scheduled in Montgomery County were postponed yesterday. Annapolis High failed to make the trip to Bethesda over the treacherous roads, the Rockville-Georgetown Prep tilt was put off to February 20 and Silver Spring will not make the trip to Frederick to play St. John's High until later in the month.

Joe Eaton, Post League Star, Signed to Contract by Albany

Arlington First Baseman, 21, Casts Lot With Pro Baseball.

JOE EATON, of Clarendon, Va., talented young first baseman of the Washington-Lee High School and Arlington Athletic Club teams, yesterday cast his lot with professional baseball and signed a contract with the Albany Club of the International League.

Young Eaton is a graduate of the Washington Post Sandlot Base Ball Association, with which the Arlington team was affiliated as a member of the Northern Virginia League last season.

It was after joining the Arlington A. C. after his graduation last summer from Washington-Lee High School, where he captained the 1934 team, that Eaton distinguished himself in The Post Association games.

His clever fielding and consistent hitting drew the attention of scouts from two major league clubs and three minor league teams. The Albany offer which he accepted was one of three which he received.

Eaton will be 21 years old in March. Despite his comparatively small stature—he weighs only 150 pounds—he was known as a long-distance swatter. Besides captaining the baseball team at Washington-Lee, he won his letter in basket ball.

Singer a Yodeler In an Argument

Just then a large, florid gentleman in leather breeches, Bavarian overalls and white shirt and hat with a shaving brush stuck in the back, arose and joined the young fellows in a sad song about an apple that hung on a tree and a beautiful cow that looked at it longingly, and something else that I did not get. The gentleman at my table took a long draught at his Muenchener and said, "Ah, dass iss Anton Burmeister, our bass yodeler. He iss the only one in the world who yodels in bass. He iss our No. 2 yodeler in singles. Haff you a bass yodeler?"

Bass and Barytone.

This was right up my alley. I said: "Have we a bass yodeler? HAVE WE? Do you mean to say you have never heard of Rudy Vallee? Only he is such a great bass yodeler that he is our NO. 1 SINGLES YODELER. He will yodel bass and barytone as beautifully as your No. 1 man yodels tenor. When you hear him yodel 'My Time Is Your Time' and 'Vagabond Lover' you will just die, that's what you'll do. Lie down and die."

The gentleman took another swig of beer and looked thoughtful for a moment. I don't think he quite expected such opposition from a country still considered in its yodeling infancy. Then he tried one more, "Ach, may be you haff goot singles yodelers, but wass will you do for the dopples yodelers? Haff you anything like Hans Biderober and Fritz Ochsenfutter, the international world's dopples yodeling champions?"

Very Fast Again.

I must say I had to think very, very fast again. Doubles yodeling was a new one on me. I looked first appropriately scornful and then gave it to him. I said: "Doubles yodelers? Why, of course. We could team up Crosby and Vallee, but they don't get on and it isn't worth while, really. We let them handle the singles assignments. We have our own doubles team. Lanny Ross and Art Jarrett! They've been working out on 'When Irish Eyes Are Smiling" and "The Minstrel Boy.' It's just no contest. Y-a-a-s. I suppose we'll send over our regular four-man team, Vallee, Crosby, Ross and Jarrett. I wouldn't be surprised if we sent Guy Lombardo with them, although Vallee usually likes to yodel with his own band. Brother, you ain't heard no yodeling at all until you heard them four. There won't be a cow or a chamois left in the Alps. I'm telling you. They'll all lie down and die." The gentleman looked defeated. He ordered another beer. So did I. On the expense account.

Davis-Elkins Quintet Shades Shepherd, 25-21

U. S. and China In Davis Cup Opener

Draw Is Made in London; Match May Be Played at Chevy Chase.

LONDON, Feb. 1 (U.P.).—China will be the opening assignment for the United States in its quest for the Davis Cup, according to today's draw for the first round of play in the international tennis championship. Mexico will play Cuba in the other first-round match of the North American zone.

The draw was made in the council chamber of the India office, headquarters of Sir Samuel Hoare, secretary of state for India and president of the British Lawn Tennis Association. Ambassadors, ministers and other representatives of the Davis Cup nations looked on as Sir Samuel drew slips of paper bearing names of the rivals from the historic trophy. The Cup rested on the famous mahogany table around which members of the pioneering East India Co. used to gather in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.

China and the United States will have to agree upon their playing date and place. It was believed that this tie will be played in the eastern part of the United States, possibly at Chevy Chase, Md. The Mexico-Cuba tie probably will be played in Mexico City. The United States and Mexico are the nations favored in their respective ties, and if they should win, it is believed the final zone test also would be held in Mexico City.

Curious Twists.

The luck of the draw took several curious twists as the make-up of the European zone was decided. For one thing, the larger balance of power was found in the lower half. For another the neighbor nations from "down under"—New Zealand and Australia—were drawn together in the first round.

The bracket was led off by byes drawn for Poland and South Africa. There are three first-round matches: Czechoslovakia vs. Yugoslavia, Japan vs. The Netherlands, New Zealand vs. Australia. The bracket was completed with byes drawn for France, Germany and Italy. The names appear on the draw sheet in the order stated above. Thus, Poland will play South Africa in the first round, while Germany is meeting Italy. France's first competition will be in the second round and will involve the winner of the New Zealand-Australia tie.

Czechoslovakia, thanks to the giant Roderick Menzel, is the most formidable nation in the upper half. Australia probably will become the finalist in the lower half.

Virginia Faces Tech Boxers Tonight

York Is Expected to Use Same Line-up; Hahn to Fight Hull.

UNIVERSITY, Va., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—Al York, who is coaching Virginia's varsity boxers while Johnny LaRowe, varsity head coach, is ailing, has completed preparations for the bouts with Virginia Polytechnic Institute here at 7:30 p. m. tomorrow.

Unless he changes his mind just before weighing in time, Coach York will use against V. P. I. the same eight Cavaliers who this winter have extended Virginia's long winning streak by defeating Harvard, 6 to 2; V. M. I., 7 to 1, and North Carolina, 4½ to 3½. The Virginians will seek their twenty-second dual victory in a row.

Tech's freshman boxers also face the Virginia first-year men tomorrow. This match will begin at 4 p. m. The varsity bouts start at 7:30 o'clock, and will be followed by the last of the midwinter dances.

Hahn Faces Hull.

Archie Hahn, Virginia co-captain and conference bantamweight champion, will oppose Charles Hull, V. P. I. sophomore. Gordon Rainey, who shares team leadership honors and is conference featherweight champion, faces Fred Hall, crack junior of the Techmen.

In the lightweight class Marion Brooks, Virginia, will meet Bob Callahan; in the welterweight class, Virginia's champion, Maynard Womer, takes on Buddy Herman. Bill McClung, Virginia, is to scrap Francis Dillon in the 155-pound class. Entries in the three heaviest weights are Mort Caplin, Virginia, against Willard Rothery; Jack Noll, Virginia, against Mel Carlel, and Fred Cramer, Virginia, against one of Tech's three heavyweights, probably Mac Banks.

3 V. P. I. Teams To Be Hosts Today

Matmen Oppose Tarheels; Basketeers to Play W. & M. Team.

BLACKSBURG, Va., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—The battleground of Virginia Tech sports will shift back to War Memorial Hall here tomorrow after two weeks of heavy campaigning away from home. Three Tech teams mill meet old foes at home to headline a week-end card of five contests.

The home card includes wrestling meets with strong varsity and freshman teams of North Carolina State and a varsity court battle with William and Mary. The first year matmen will clash at 3 p. m., and the Tech and Indian courtmen at 7 p. m. The varsity wrestling meet will start at 8:15.

Tech's varsity and freshman boxers are to face University of Virginia ringmen in the Memorial gymnasium at Charlottesville in their last dual encounter away from home. Two home tests in February will pit the Tech varsity against Washington and Lee, on the 9th, and Carolina State on the 16th.

Mottola May Return.

Handicapped by absence of Joe Mottola at guard, Tech's varsity cagers were not at full strength the latter half of the North Carolina game, and in the clash with V. M. I. in earlier battles this week. Tech's chances against the Indians rest heavily upon whether the scrappy little New Yorker, Joe Mottola, is back at guard, fully recovered from the knee injury suffered at Chapel Hill.

Evans may replace Dan Chambers in the 115-pound class when Tech's varsity matmen make a rousing bid for victory over State, one of the strongest mat teams in the conference. Other Tech entries in order of weight are Russell Minter, Ben Adkins, Clete Broyles, M. P. Gooden, Bob Priode, Rupert Porter and Kay Dailey.

Wheat Values Slump Under Gold Case Fear

Cotton Prices Show Losses Under Selling; May Cut to 12.38.

Chicago, Feb. 1 (AP).—Big shipments of Argentine corn to the United States did a good deal today to drag all grain values lower.

Announcement was made that Argentina's grain exports this week included 1,803,000 bushels of corn to this country, together with 462,000 bushels of oats. In addition were 301,000 bushels of Argentine wheat the destination of which was optional, either the United States or Europe. A further bearish influence was the fact that suspense in regard to the United States Supreme Court's forthcoming gold-clause decision tended to check buying activity.

After a maximum fall of a cent a bushel, corn closed nervous, ⅛-½ under yesterday's finish, May 83⅞-84; wheat ⅛-⅜ down, May 96-96⅛, oats ¼-⅜ off, and provisions showing 5 to 12 cents decline.

Pressure On Corn.

Commission house selling pressure developed early in the Chicago corn futures market, and continued until almost the end of the day. There were indications, too, of some loosening up on the part of domestic holders of corn available for immediate use. Furthermore, demand here from shippers of corn was slack.

About the only support for the corn market came from previous speculative sellers who were in a position to collect a profit. Downturns of corn prices were in the face of the fact that the market had recently undergone a decline of about 10 cents a bushel. On the other hand, the Chicago wheat market today showed relative firmness at times, owing to something of an advance in Liverpool wheat quotations and to 12,500,000 bushels decrease of the Argentine estimated exportable wheat surplus.

Provisions were responsive to grain weakness, despite upturns of hog values.

Cotton Market

New York, Feb. 1 (AP).—Trading in cotton was slightly more active today with prices easing under scattered liquidation which was absorbed by trade buying within a comparatively narrow range. May sold off from 12.42 to 12.36 and closed at 12.38, with the general market steady at net declines of 4 to 5 points.

Disappointing Liverpool cables and the easier ruling of Bombay brought in some scattered selling which was fairly well taken by the trade at the start, but the liquidation continued and prices eased under the pressure with March selling off to 12.30, while July declined to 12.37 during the middle of the day.

Offerings were taken on scale down buying by the trade, however, and the market held fairly steady in the late trading with orders pretty evenly divided. March closed at 12.31, July at 12.39, with active months generally showing rallies of a point or two from the lowest.

Exports today 9,664, making 2,993,255 so far this season. Port receips 10,054; port stocks 2,839,375.

Cottonseed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil was steady early today, but reacted later under scattered local and commission house selling, promoted by the easier trend to lard, which offset the firmness of crude oil, which was quoted at 9⅝ to .10c. Final prices were 4 to 7 points net lower, with sales of 25 contracts. Seed prices were lower at Memphis, losing 50c a ton net. ### New York Stock Exchange Is Giving Serious Consideration to Administrative Changes Suggested by Securities Commission, Is View.

(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

New York, Feb. 1.—Likelihood that the New York Stock Exchange will adopt most, if not all, of the proposals for changes in its administration suggested by the Securities and Exchange Commission has been enhanced by sharp divisions of opinion on the matter that have developed within the membership of the exchange and among members of its board of governors. In fact, the whole subject of the future management and public relations policy of the exchange is now under close scrutiny and active discussion within its own ranks.

The proposals of the commission for democratization of the administration of the New York Stock Exchange and for expanding the role of commission houses which deal with the general public, in its management have already evoked an immediate open and favorable response from the Association of Stock Exchange Firms. This body acts as spokesman for the large commission houses that bring to the floor of the exchange the bulk of the public's orders.

The association, in fact, has itself been quietly agitating for the adoption of many of the commission's proposals for some time past. It has charged that the present system of election of the chief committees and the officials of the New York Stock Exchange has tended to place control of the institution too largely in the hands of those members whose activities are entirely or largely restricted to the floor of the exchange, rather than to dealings with the outside public. Floor brokers and traders, specialists, odd-lot houses and bond brokers, who have two-thirds of the places on the board of governors of the exchange, maintain a self-perpetuating hold on its management, it has been claimed.

Many Officials Are Reluctant To Adopt SEC Proposals.

On the other hand, many of those who now direct the conduct of the exchange are quite reluctant to adopt the proposals of the commission. One contention they stress is that a system of choosing candidates for places as governors and officials of the exchange by petition among the members, rather than through a small nominating committee, may stimulate electioneering practices. Undesirable persons, through aggressive tactics, they argue, may acquire positions of great power on the exchange. In other words, a democratic exchange may become more inimical to the public interest, they charge, than one in which the management tends to be "hand picked" under a system which, according to the Securities and Exchange Commision, leads to "the self-perpetuation of the 'in' group."

One type of criticism that has been voiced frequently against the New York Stock Exchange in recent years has been that it is conducted more like a "social club" than a "social institution." Spokesmen for the exchange have countered that its sole function was to provide a free and open market in securities. They have argued that conditions on the exchange merely reflect, rather than determine, outside business conditions. Hence, it was concluded, the exchange would make its maximum contribution to American economic development by concentrating upon the maintenance of a broad, efficient market place, and not concerning itself with broader questions such as the level of stock prices, whether too much credit was being used to finance speculation, etc.

Popular and congressional opinion, however, has not seen eye to eye with the exchange on this question of its social responsibilities. The view is now quite widespread, and held by a number of reputable economists among others, that stock exchange activity influences business conditions, as well as being influenced itself by them. The securities exchange act, among other things, sought to assure that the broad public interest would be represented in the conduct of the financial markets when it set up the Securities and Exchange Commission and gave it its present powers.

Public Sentiment Results in Adoption of New Measures.

The New York Stock Exchange itself, in the meanwhile, has proceeded to adopt measures to this same end in response to public sentiment. An advisory group of ten, headed by Fred I. Kent, of the Bankers Trust Co., and including industrialists, railroad men and one critic of the exchange, Adolf A. Berle, jr., has been set up to represent the public viewpoint within the exchange, and and also to represent the exchange before the public. Substantial differences of opinion have already developed within this group, it has been reported, as to what its proper function and policy should be.

One large group of exchange members is urging a quick favorable decision, to show the country at large that the exchange itself is ready to adopt voluntarily and with alacrity reasonable suggestions for its own more democratic government. Another group has adopted a fatalistic attitude, saying that Congress could impose these suggested changes by law, and it would be better to accept them voluntarily than to ignore the suggestions of the commission and leave the matter for action of the national legislature. A third group, of indeterminate size, favors an attitude of aggressive opposition to dictation as to the internal management of the exchange from Washington, holding that a revulsion of popular feeling against undue restriction of financial markets by the Government is now taking place, and that in any event the courts will give the exchange protection.

Bond Market Steadies While Federals Gain

High Grade Securities Aid Firm Tone; Volume at $10,130,000.

New York, Feb. 1 (AP).—The bond market was aided today by firmness in U. S. Government obligations and other high-grade loans, and a fairly steady tone was maintained throughout the day.

Volume continued around the low levels of previous sessions, transactions totaling $10,130,000 par value.

As the firm tone in Government loans was accomplished with only a small amount of dealings, the advancing tendencies were considered significant in financial circles. Other high-grade fixed interest bearing securities followed the lead of Federal loans, notably the Paramount-Famous and Paramount-Publix bonds which responed to the approval of the company's reorganization plans with gains of around a point each.

In the domestic group fractionally higher prices were paid for Santa Fe 4s at 108, Baltimore & Ohio 4s at 101⅞, Chile Copper 5s at 85½, New York Edison 6s at 108¾, and Missouri Pacific 5s at 28⅝.

However, the advances were not general and small losses were shown by Central Pacific 5s at 78, Burlington general 4s at 107¼, and Republic Iron & Steel 5s at 104¼. This uncertain trend resulted in the Associated Press averages for selected utilities, industrials and rails being about unchanged.

Gains of from 1-32d to 9-32ds of a point in United States Government loans were the feature of the day's trading. Treasury 4¼s of 1947-52 were up 7-32ds at 114.28 and a similar advance was made in Treasury 3⅜s of 1940-43 at 105.22. Liberty 3½s were up 5-32ds at 104.13, and Home Owners' Loan 2¾s were up 9-32ds at 98.19.

Foreign bonds were highly irregular, with about an even mixture of plus and minus signs.

Price-Fixing Decline Is Seen In NRA Survey

(Associated Press.)

NRA's increasingly pronounced opposition to code controls that make for rigid prices is based in part on its researches tending to show that those industries with the "worst" price records have been the best employers.

In a new report on hours and wages, it surveys the records of 23 industries in 1934, compared with 1929 and notes "particularly" this fact, and the corollary that "the industries with present prices of the 1929 level have afforded but little rise in employment."

Baking, chemical and boot and shoe industries show the greatest stability in employment while prices of their products average about 70 per cent of the 1929 level.

Consiruction Prices Up.

On the other hand, the residential building, brick and tile, agricultural implements and furniture industries, the report finds, give relatively much less employment, while the prices of their products average more than 90 per cent of the level in 1929.

Rayon and meats, with the lowest prices compared to 1929, had the best employment records, and the trend of prices in these two industries was generally downward during the period. Particularly in the case of rayon.

This data accounts in part also for NRA's new stress on the necessity of stimulating production as the primary means of reemployment. Production, the theory is, is stimulated by dropping prices where such fall is the result of normal forces—that is, not the result of cutthroat price tactics.

The report warns against pushing the conclusion too far, because other factors affect employment. Actual price-fixing has been indorsed by all official sources for the coal industry, and it is probable that prices are less important in established industries where demand is not likely to grow spectacularly.

Stocks Yield Fractions in Slow Trading

Dribbling Liquidation Clips Prices; Sales at 494,180 Shares.

New York, Feb. 1 (AP).—The trading fraternity drew a little further into its shell today and appeared to hibernate, even though one eye may have cocked toward Washington and the coming Supreme Court gold decision.

The dribbling liquidation that came into stocks and commodities had more the appearance of cautious adjustment of positions pending a possible gold ruling Monday than of any real fear over its outcome.

A few leading shares were rather soft. U. S. Steel preferred got down 2¾ points at 87¼, and the common was fractionally lower at 36⅝, while losses of a point or a little more appeared in Allied Chemical at 135 and Santa Fe at 43⅞.

Averages Lose Fractions.

Renewal of the automobile code in substantially its present form was announced from Washington. This action had generally been expected in Wall street circles and leading motor shares gave no evidence of attracting purchasers. General Motors at 30⅞, and Chrysler 37½ each lost a little ground during the session.

A few leaders in the share market were able to move counter to the trend to gain fractions including American Telephone at 105, Anaconda at 41¼ and Union Carbide at 46¾.

In most cases, however, the lack of enthusiasm resulted in recessions limited to a half point or less. In this group were American Can at 112, American Smelting at 34⅜, Bethlehem Steel at 29⅞, Consolidated Gas at 19⅞, General Electric at 23¼, Montgomery Ward at 25¾, National Biscuit at 28¼, Pennsylvania at 21⅛, Southern Pacific at 15⅛ and Southern Railway at 12¾.

Coffee Use Shows Decrease of 1.5 Per Cent During 1934

Coffee drinkers of the United States consumed 16.3 cups less coffee each, on the average, during 1934, the first full year of legal hard liquor drinking, according to a survey by the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange. The estimated figures show that daily consumption amounted to 2.86 cups per person in 1934 compared with 2.91 cups during 1933.

U. S. consumption, as measured by deliveries of green coffee to the roasting trade, amounted to 11,774,033 bags during 1934, a decrease of 1.54 per cent from the 1933 distribution, which amounted to 11,957,864 bags.

The exchange statistician points out that an estimate of habitual drinkers only was used in calculating the per capita consumption, that a 16 per cent allowance was made for loss in weight during the roasting of the coffee and that actual consumption might be slightly larger than the estimates because of a possible decrease in the unrevealed stocks of roasters and retailers from the first to the end of the year.

Mutual Savings Banks Report Gains in 1934

New York, Feb. 1.—A new high record in the number of depositors, coupled with substantial gains in deposits and assets is shown in the report of the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks covering 1934. Deposits in these banks in 18 States on December 21 amounted to $9,757,690,937, an increase of $163,080,092 for the year. Assets increased by $199,497,834 to $11,055,498,096. The number of depositors was 13,836,975 against 13,413,049 a year earlier.

More Interest Shown in Hides.

New York, Feb. 1 (AP).—Some of the larger hide tanners are said to be showing more interest in the spot market. Last trading reported in light native cows was at 8 cents a pound.

Walt Mason

Escape.

We seek for methods of escape from dull routine of every shape. Grown weary of the daily grind, some small diversion we would find. To brighten up this sodden life, one weary voter beats his wife, one robs the corner grocer's shop, and still another whips a cop. One man proceeds to air his views, which don't instruct us or amuse, and when he's talked three hours or more we all agree that he's a bore. I've known a man who walked eight miles, and came back fresh and full of smiles; he said, "There's nothing like a tramp, if one would bid his woes decamp; when one has climbed a mighty hill, and waded through a babbling rill, and, far away from urban pomp, has struggled through a mouldy swamp, he finds a true, complete relief from every form of mundane grief." One takes his gun with anxious care and tracks a rabbit to its lair, and falls down cliffs and sprains his neck and makes his ligaments a wreck, and barks his shins on fallen trees and sees his ears and whiskers freeze, and he comes home through weather bad, and tells about the fun he's had. I watch my friends and gasp and gape, and scorn their methods of escape. Give me a book that has a kick and I forget the scurvy trick that life is much inclined to play upon the routine-burdened jay.

War in Mexico Likely by May, Says Publicist

Fighting in 12 States Now Makes Travel Unsafe, Williams Reports.

Calles, the iron man, is growing soft.

This was the picture of Mexico brought back from a protracted tour of the country by Frederick Vincent Williams, San Francisco publicist, who stopped off in Washington with Mrs. Williams to speak on the southern republic under auspices of the Holy Name Society of St. Patrick's Church February 10.

Williams entered Mexico under the guidance of the famous Liga Nacional, a Mexican Catholic lay organization. He interviewed bishops and priests and nuns in hiding. He visited armed camps of the Oristeros. He talked with bankers and industrialists.

"A Seething Volcano."

"I found Mexico a seething volcano about to erupt," he said. "Ninety per cent of the people are Catholic. Ten per cent of them are not. The 10 per cent are ruling the 90 per cent, and these are dominated by the tenets of Communism.

"Already there is fighting in 12 states. This fighting, in the form of major offensives, will reach Mexico City and the border cities by May and June. Even now travel is made unsafe by guerrilla fighting.

"The old Calles party is split. Contrary to the general impression in this country, Calles is no longer the iron man, the strong man of Mexico. He is passe so far as dictatorship is concerned. He is rich, ill and retired. Cardenas and Cannabal, the two dominant figures, are at swords' points.

"The educational system of the country is completely shattered. It was the church, against the opposition of successive governments, for nearly a hundred years, that has given to Mexico what culture and education it has received. Now this is ended by confiscation. The socialistic schools are cheap, empty, unequipped buildings without teachers.

The Masses in Revolt.

"Religious persecution is the cause of revolt. The church is taking no part, has been advised against it, but the great mass of the people, deeply religious, are taking up arms, unable longer to bear persecution."

Mr. and Mrs. Williams revealed here that they crossed the border at Laredo bearing documents and messages from Mexican bishops to the American heirarchy and 92 forbidden photographs sewn in the lining of their clothing.

In Mexico, Williams was permitted to interview the famous Archbishop Orozco, of Guadalajara, "somewhere in the State of Jalisco," the only American writer to see him since his return from exile August 19. He found the archbishop living in hiding, venturing among his people in disguise.

Williams has reported his findings to Archbishop Curley in Baltimore and will proceed to New York and thence to Rome.

Doctors Seek to End 17 Days of Hiccoughs

Chicago, Feb. 1 (AP).—Elizabeth Warner, pretty 19-year-old Wheaton College coed, was given intravenous feedings today as physicians attempted to end her 17-day attack of hiccoughing.

The spasms recur at the rate of 20 a minute and she has been unable to sleep for more than four hours at a stretch.

Fishermen Are Rescued From Ice Floe in Lake

Hancock, Mich., Feb. 1 (AP).—Twelve Lake Superior fishermen were back safely in their homes tonight after being rescued from a huge ice floe on which they were marooned when it suddenly broke from shore ice on Keweenaw Bay.

They were taken off the floe by two fellow fishermen in a large rowboat. The men had been adrift four hours when rescued.
